THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE

ACT V OF 1908.

VOLUME II.

THE FIRST SCHEDULE.

GENERAL.

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the Order. 2. "Party," Meaning of.

1. Scope of the Order.—"If we turn to the Code," said Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C.J., in Krishnappa v. Shivappa,[1] "We find, as the essentials of a suit opposing parties, a subject in dispute, a cause of action and a demand of relief". This Order deals with the subject of parties to suits and inter alia with the joinder, misjoinder and non-joinder of parties and to a certain extent with the joinder of causes of action.[2] O. 1, Note 1.

Joinder of parties.—All persons may be joined as plaintiffs in whom any right to relief in respect of, or arising out of, the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, where if such persons brought separate suits, any common question of law or fact would arise (R. 1). Where there are numerous persons, however, having the same interest in one suit, one or more of such persons may, with the leave of the Court, sue on behalf of all such persons (R. 8). If the joinder of the plaintiffs is likely to embarrass or delay the trial of the suit, the Court may put the plaintiffs to their election or order separate trials (R. 2). All persons may be joined as defendants against whom any such relief is claimed, where, if separate suits were brought against them any common question of law or fact would arise (R. 3), though it is not necessary that every defendant should be interested in all the reliefs claimed in the suit (R. 5). A plaintiff who is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to relief may, however, join two or more defendants in order that the question as to which of the defendants is liable, and to what extent, may be determined between all the parties (R. 7). The Court can give judgment for or against any one or more of the parties, for such relief as they may be found entitled to, or liable (R. 4).

Misjoinder and non-joinder of parties.—If the joinder of parties in the suit is not such as is permitted by O. 1, Rr. 1 and 3, there is a misjoinder of parties. If persons who ought to be made parties are not made parties there is a non-joinder of parties. All objections to the misjoinder or non-joinder of parties should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity or at or before the settlement of issues (R. 13). No suit shall be defeated by reason of the misjoinder or non-joinder of parties, and the Court may deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it (R. 9). The Court may also, at any stage of the suit strike out the name of any party improperly joined or may add a necessary or a proper party, or may, where the suit has been instituted in the name of the wrong person, substitute any other persons as the plaintiff (R. 10).

As to who are necessary or proper parties, see O. 1, R. 10.

Though O. 1 in terms refers only to "suits" its provisions are also applicable to joinder of parties to appeals.[3]

2. "Party," Meaning of.—A person can become a party to a suit only by his name appearing on the record of the suit as a party.[1] The mere fact that he is the person really interested in the suit and that the party on the record is only his benamidar, does not make him a party.[1a] The introduction of a party at one stage of a suit, is good for all subsequent stages thereof.[2] The mere fact that a person is joined as a plaintiff in a suit does not entitle him to be associated in a decree in favour of the person who alone has the real title.[3]

The same person cannot appear as plaintiff and defendant unless he appears on the record in different capacities.[4] though the plaintiffs may have been injured by the same act of the defendant[2] and even if the cases of the plaintiffs are to be proved by the same evidence.[3] Thus where the plaintiffs, owning separate parcels of land, sued the defendant for trespass on their lands, it was held that they could not join as plaintiffs in one suit inasmuch as their causes of action were different.[4] There was also a difference of opinion as to whether the words "cause of action" referred only to the infringement of the right claimed, or whether it included also the facts constituting the right itself.[4-a]

The present rule makes it clear that, for several plaintiffs to join in one suit, it is not necessary, that their causes of action should be identical.[5] It, however, imposes two other conditions both of which must be fulfilled in order to enable them to join in one suit as plaintiffs,[6] namely,

(1) the right to relief must arise out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions, and

(2) the matter must be such that, if the plaintiffs brought separate suits any common question of law or fact would arise. The policy of the rule is that, even in cases where the plaintiffs seek individual reliefs, where the investigation would to a great extent be identical in each individual case, they may unite as co-plaintiffs and thus avoid needless expense.[6-a]

Under the old English rule corresponding to the present rule it was held in England that several plaintiffs having distinct and separate causes of action could not join in one suit as plaintiffs.[7] The rule was amended in October, 1896, which now reads as follows:—

> "All persons may be joined in one action as plaintiffs in whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same transaction or series of transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative, where, if such persons brought separate actions any common question of fact or law would arise . . ."

O. 1, R. 1, Notes 2—3.

It has accordingly been held in England after the date of the said amendment, that even plaintiffs having distinct causes of action can join in one suit as plaintiffs, provided that the right to relief arises out of the same transaction or transactions and the case is one where if separate suits were brought any common question of law or fact would arise.[8] Thus, where several debenture-holders sued the directors of a company for damages for misrepresentation in the prospectus, it was held that though the plaintiffs had made separate contracts their right to relief arose out of the issue of the prospectus and therefore out of the same transaction and they could all join in one suit.[9] Similarly, where the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge jointly sued the defendant to restrain him from using the words "Oxford and Cambridge" in the title of his publications, it was held that the right to relief arose out of one transaction, or series of transactions, if each publication was a separate transaction, and that the question of publication and the belief that would be induced by such publication were common questions of fact.[10]

The rule lays down who may be joined as plaintiffs in the same suit. It does not say that any person must join as plaintiff to a suit; nor does it say anything as to who are necessary or proper parties to a suit, whom it may be essential or advisable to join.[11]

3. Plaintiffs having different interests.—Where A and B are entitled to different interests in a property, as when A is the melwaramdar and B, the kudiwaramdar of certain property it has been held that they can sue together for the recovery of the property from a third person C, where the ground of their action is common.[1] Where A is originally the owner of property and he alienates a portion of it to B, can A and B sue together for the recovery of the property, where the ground of their action is common? Upon this question there was a conflict of decisions under the old Code. It was held by the Allahabad High Court[2] that A and B could not join in the same suit in such a case as they did not have the same cause of action. But it was held by the High Court of Calcutta,[3] the Chief Court of Punjab[4] and the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court[5] that they could join as plaintiffs in such a case. Under the present rule such a joinder is clearly permissible. Thus, in a suit for possession, where one of the plaintiffs is the purchaser from the co-sharer of the other plaintiff, there is no misjoinder.[6]

Similarly, the rule permits a suit being filed by persons in a double capacity, provided the conditions in O. 1, R. 1 are not transgressed.[7] Thus a person may seek in the same suit, to recover possession of certain properties in his individual capacity and certain other properties in his capacity as the shebait of an idol.[8]

4. "Person in whom any right to relief exists."—The words "any right to relief" are wider than the words "the right to relief" used in the old section.[1]

5. Same act or transaction.—The present rule enables different plaintiffs to join in one suit where the right to relief alleged to exist in each of them arises out of the same transaction and there is a common question of fact or law to be decided.

The following are some of the cases decided under this rule:—

(1) A sold to B a certain property which was in the wrongful possession of C. B sued C for profits realised by C both before and after the transfer, impleading A as a pro forma plaintiff. The plaintiff asked for amendment of the plaint so as to add a prayer for a decree in favour of A for the profits realised by C before the transfer. Held, that the amendment could be allowed.[1]

(2) Co-sharers suing the lambardar for profits may join in the same suit. The reason is that their several rights arise out of the same act, viz., the lambardar's failure to divide the profits among the co-sharers on the due date.[2]

(3) A mother and her sons, members of a Malabar tarwad, residing together may maintain a joint suit for recovery of their maintenance-amounts.[3]

See also Amir Bibi v. Abdul, (1901) 3 Bom L R 658 (660) [Mohamedan widow and her daughter can sue jointly husband's heir for their shares of inheritance].

(4) Co-sharers, although they have been collecting rents separately, may join in the same suit for rent against the tenant, though the rents refer to different periods.[4] O. 1, R. 1, Notes 5—6.

(5) A contingent reversioner may join as co-plaintiff in the presumptive reversioner's suit to set aside an alleged invalid adoption. The object of the suit is to remove an apprehended injury which is common to the interests of all reversioners, presumptive as well as contingent.[5]

In each of the above cases the plaintiffs' rights arose out of the same transaction or series of transactions and hence, they were held entitled to join in the same suit. Conversely, where the rights of the several plaintiffs do not arise out of the same transaction or series of transactions but arise out of different transactions, there can be no valid joinder of such plaintiffs under this rule.[6]

6. Any common question of fact or law.—As has been observed already in Note 2 above, it is also necessary that a common question of law or fact should arise in the suit. Thus, although the plaintiffs may be suing the same defendant and for a similar relief, and their right may arise out of the same transaction, they cannot join in one suit where the case of each plaintiff gives rise to different questions of fact and law.[1]

Illustrations.

1. The plaintiffs in a suit were holders of a piper service in a temple and filed a suit for setting aside an order of dismissal passed by the trustee of the temple. The different plaintiffs were entitled to different shares in the inam. The charges of misconduct against the several plaintiffs on which they were dismissed were not identical. Held, that the plaintiffs could not sue together as each of their cases gave rise to different questions.[2]

2. Plaintiffs instituted a suit for the establishment of occupancy rights in their various holdings against the shrotriemdar. The genuineness of the muchilikas alleged to have been executed by some of the plaintiffs was denied and certain decrees obtained against some of the plaintiffs were challenged as having been fraudulently obtained. Held, that the suit was bad for misjoinder as it gave rise to different questions of fact and law in the case of the different plaintiffs.[3]

7. "Jointly."—Even in the case of persons jointly entitled to any relief the rule only says that all such persons may be joined as plaintiffs in one suit. This however does not affect the general principle of law that all such persons must be made parties to the suit either as plaintiffs or as defendants.[1] The reason is that all such persons together represent a single and indivisible right which cannot be adjudicated upon and no effective decree passed by the Court in the absence of all such persons.[2] The following are all illustrations of persons in whom the right to relief jointly exists and who, therefore, must be made parties to the suit in order that an effective decree may be passed therein :—

(1) Joint owners of property suing to recover the same.[3]

(2) All executors who have proved the will suing to recover the property belonging to the estate of the testator.[4]

(3) Co-trustees suing to recover trust property.[5]

(4) Members of a committee appointed under the Religious Endowments Act (1863) suing for the removal of a person acting as a trustee of the endowment.[6]

(5) Joint promisees under a contract suing to enforce the contract.[7] (See Contract Act, S. 45.)

A suit by creditors to set aside an alienation as being fraudulent within the meaning of S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act must be by or on behalf of all.[8] So also a suit by members of a Hindu joint family to recover a property belonging to the joint family must be by or on behalf of all the members.[9]

Where a number of persons are jointly entitled to the same relief in respect of a transaction, and one of them wishes to sue to enforce that relief, the proper course is for him to ask the other persons to join in the suit as co-plaintiffs. If they refuse to join in the suit as plaintiffs, they must be joined as defendants.[10] But the really essential point is that all the persons jointly interested must be on the record as parties whether as plaintiffs or defendants. Hence, a suit should not be dismissed merely because the plaintiff fails to prove that before joining the persons jointly interested with him as defendants, he asked them to join as co-plaintiffs and they refused to do so.[11]

O. 1, R. 1, Notes 7—9.

8. "Severally."—Where the same transaction entitles each one of a number of persons to relief severally, i.e., individually and not jointly, they may all join as plaintiffs in the same suit under the present rule if the questions to be decided are common.[1] But this course is not obligatory. One or more of such persons may sue separately to enforce the relief.[2] Thus, where every member of the community has an individual right to worship on a platform round a sacred tree, he may sue alone for the removal of any obstruction placed upon the platform.[3] The other members of the community may also join as plaintiffs in the suit. But this is not necessary for the maintainability of the suit.

9. "In the alternative."—A and B sue C alleging that either A or B is entitled to relief against C in respect of a certain transaction. The present rule permits the joinder of A and B in one suit in such a case.[1] Thus, in the undermentioned case.[2] A, the widow, and, B the adopted son of C, a deceased person, sued for a debt due to C. The adoption was questioned by C's reversioners. But A did not dispute the adoption and joined with B in instituting the suit praying that if the adoption was established a decree should be passed in B's favour but that if the adoption was held not proved, a decree should be passed in favour of A. It was held, that the suit was not bad for misjoinder as it came within the expression "alternative" in the present rule. But if in the above case the widow disputed the adoption, she and the adopted son could not be joined as plaintiffs in one suit.[3] The reason is that the rule does not warrant the joinder, as plaintiffs in one suit, of rival claimants each of whom denies the right of the other. Where again, it is not alleged that the right to relief exists in the alternative but the plaintiffs are joined in the hope of getting a decree by something like a mass attack on the defendants and of afterwards dividing the fruits of victory among the plaintiffs by further litigation inter se, such a suit, their Lordships of the Privy Council observe, is inconvenient in plan and must be condemned.[4]

10. Appeal.—The rule contained in O. 1, R. 1 applies to appeals also. Hence, where a suit is filed on foot of a promissory note executed by the first defendant in favour of the second defendant and assigned by the latter to the plaintiff and is dismissed as against the first defendant but is decreed in full against the second defendant, the plaintiff and the second defendant can prefer a joint appeal to have the first defendant also made liable.[1]

Synopsis.

1. Power of Court to order separate trials.

1. Power of Court to order separate trials.—This rule is new and empowers the Court in suits in which more plaintiffs than one are joined, to order separate trials, or require any one plaintiff to elect to carry on the suit or to make any other appropriate order.[1] It, however, applies only to cases

1. Legislative changes.—

1. The words "in respect of the same matter" have been substituted by the words "in respect of or arising out of the same act or series of acts or transactions". Under the old Code there was a conflict of opinion as to the interpretation of the words "same matter". One view held that it was equivalent to "same cause of action".[1] According to another view, it was used in a more comprehensive sense than the words "cause of action" and was intended to allow a joinder of defendants even where relief was sought in respect of separate causes of action against the different defendants so long as they all arose "in respect of the same matter".[2] This conflict has now been removed by giving legislative recognition to the latter view.

2. The words "where if separate suits were brought against such persons any common question of law or fact would arise" are new. This alteration lays down a condition for the applicability of the rule.

3. The words "the right to any relief" have been changed into "any right to relief", thus giving the rule a wider scope.[3]

2. Scope and object of the rule.—This is the main rule governing the joinder of defendants. The object of this rule and that of O. 1, R. 1 is to avoid multiplicity of suits and needless expense, if it could be done without embarrassment to the parties and the Court.[1] All persons may therefore be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief is alleged to exist provided that

(1) such right arises in respect of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions, and,

(2) the case is one where if separate suits were instituted against the defendants any common question of law or fact would arise.

It is not necessary that all the defendants should be interested in all the reliefs and transactions comprised in the suit or that the liability of all the defendants should be the same.[1-a] Nor is it necessary that the evidence as regards each of the defendants should be the same[2] or that the cause of action against each of the defendants should be the same.[2-a] But it is necessary that both the conditions set forth above should exist[3] though in order to satisfy the second condition, it is enough if there is one question common to all the defendants which is of sufficient importance in proportion to the rest of the action.[4]

O. 1, R. 3, Notes 2—3.

The provisions of this rule, like those of O. 1, R. 1 ante are not imperative and obligatory[5]; nor are they exhaustive of all cases of joinder of defendants. Additional power to make certain persons defendants is expressly given by Rr. 6, 7 and 10 infra although no right to any relief is alleged or can be alleged against them.[6]

As has already been observed in Note 1 to O. 1, this order though headed "parties to suits" deals also to some extent with joinder of causes of action, inasmuch as when a plaintiff frames his suit he joins persons as defendants because he claims to have a cause of action against them. O. 2, R. 3 deals exclusively with the joinder of causes of action. O. 1, Rr. 1 and 3 and O. 2, R. 3 really deal with the same problem from two different standpoints. The former two rules are barred upon the fundamental principle that needless multiplicity of suits should be avoided while the latter aims at the principle that the trial of the suit should not be embarrassed. O. 2, R. 3 must therefore be read so as not to clash with this rule.[7]

3. "All persons may be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief . . . exist."—

"Persons."—The word "persons" includes corporations whether incorporated or not.[1] For the purpose of Admiralty proceedings a ship has been held to be a "person".[2]

"May be joined."—The rule is not imperative.[3] A plaintiff is not bound to sue every possible adverse claimant in the same suit. He is "dominus litis" and may choose to implead only those persons as defendants against whom he wishes to proceed and may leave the questions as against others to be decided on a future occasion or allow them to be barred at his own risk.[4] In cases of joint tort-feasors it is open to the plaintiff to sue any or all of the tort-feasors in one suit though by suing some persons only his remedy against others might become barred.[5] Similarly in the case of joint contractors. See O. 1, R. 6.

"Right to relief."—Whether a person can have relief, against a particular person or persons is a matter that is governed by the substantive law. As a general rule only those persons can be joined as parties to a suit against whom any right to relief is alleged to exist.[6] But in certain cases[7] as for example where the right to relief exists in the plaintiff, jointly with others and such others refuse to join him as plaintiffs, it will be necessary to add them as defendants though no right to relief is alleged to exist against them. See O. 1, R. 10 infra.

4. The parties must be within the jurisdiction of the Court.—In a suit against A and B in which the Court had jurisdiction against A but none against B, Mr. Justice Woodroffe said as follows:—"In my opinion O. 1, R. 3 has no bearing on the case. That rule of the order is a provision which relates to a joinder of parties; and it assumes the existence of a suit in a proper forum, the Court having jurisdiction to try the suit. If the Court has such jurisdiction, the O. 1, R. 3 may come into play."[1]

5. "Alleged."—The question of misjoinder of defendants in any particular case must be judged from the fact whether it is alleged in the plaint that there is against the defendants any right to relief arising out of the same act or transaction.[1] Whether that allegation is right or wrong is not a question to be considered, the question is whether upon the facts as alleged in the plaint and having regard to the relief asked for, there is any misjoinder.[2] It does not depend upon the defence set up[3] or on the evidence[4] or on the decree awarded to the plaintiff.[5] It is submitted that the undermentioned case[6] so far as it held that the Court could go into the evidence and then hold that there was misjoinder in spite of the fact that all the necessary allegations were made in the plaint, cannot be accepted as correct.

6. "In respect of the same act or transaction."—The word "same" preceding the words "act or transaction" applies also to the words "series of acts or transactions".[1] O. 1, R. 3, Note 6.

The simplest instance of cases where any right to relief arises out of the same act or transaction occurs in suits in which, the plaintiff challenges for instance, an order or act of a Court or of an executive authority, joining several persons as defendants who claim rights under the said act or order as against the plaintiff, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative.[2] A right to relief cannot be said to arise out of the same act or transaction if the case against each defendant is entirely distinct and separate in its subject-matter from that of the other defendants.[3] In a suit against A, B, C, D and E, the plaintiff alleged that certain goods belonged to him, that A obtained the documents of title relating thereto from the plaintiff by fraud and made them over to B, that B knowing that A had no title either to the document or the goods, wrongfully dealt with them and sold the goods to C and D, that C and D wrongfully claimed to retain the goods and the documents of title, that A pledged one of the documents of title with E and that the goods were in the possession of C. He claimed recovery of the documents of title and the goods covered thereby, or in the alternative, damages. It was held that the alleged fraud of A was the foundation of the case on which the rest of it depended, that it concerned all the parties and that therefore there was no misjoinder of parties.[4]

Where a plaintiff alleges a right against a person and sues to enforce it, other persons who claim or seek to exercise the same right in opposition to the plaintiff, may be joined as defendants; because the infringement of the plaintiff's right is the transaction out of which the whole claim arises.[5]

O. 1, R. 3, Notes 6—9.

In a suit for recovery of property by an owner against several persons who are alleged to have unlawfully got into possession of various parcels of land and combined to resist the right and title of the plaintiff, all such persons may be joined in one suit. The cause of the plaintiff is one and entire and cannot be affected by the title under which the defendants profess to hold. The plaintiff is entitled to claim possession of his lands as a whole and not in fragments and all persons who oppose him in the enforcement of that right, are concerned in his cause of action and therefore there cannot be any misjoinder of defendants.[6] But if no connection or conspiracy is alleged to exist between the various persons joined as defendants, or if it is not alleged that they acted in concert or under a common title, it cannot be said that the plaintiff's right to relief arises out of the same transaction or series of transactions and the suit will be bad for misjoinder of defendants.[7]

7. "Jointly."—In all cases of a joint liability or a joint and several liability, all the persons liable may be joined as defendants.[1] Thus where A and his benamidar B jointly execute a sale deed to C containing a joint covenant for quiet possession, and the covenant is broken, C can sue A and B for damages.[2]

8. Joint tort-feasors.—In suits on joint torts each tort-feasor is responsible for the injury sustained by the common act and they can all be sued together.[1] Thus in a suit for damages for assault against A and B where the act was done simultaneously in pursuance of a conspiracy there is no misjoinder; for, in such a case the assault is a single act or transaction.[2]

9. "Severally."—Where the plaintiff's right to relief against several persons arises out of the same act or transaction and where if separate suits were brought against them any common question of law or fact would arise, such persons may be joined in one suit as defendants though they are severally liable. Thus in suits for contribution arising out of the same matter, all persons liable to contribute may be joined and the liability of each may be determined in proportion to his interest and provided for separately.[1] Similarly a suit to set aside a revenue sale for arrears of rent against several persons each of whom had purchased different separate items of property is not bad for misjoinder, the proceeding complained of being one, and the ground upon which it is impugned being also the same.[2] O. 1, R. 3, Note 9.

Where a Hindu reversionary heir sues after the death of the widow for recovery of possession of immoveable property belonging to the last male owner alleged to have been improperly alienated, there was a conflict of decisions under the old Code as to whether he is entitled to join all the alienees in one suit as defendants.[3]

In Rup Narain v. Gopal Devi,[4] a case under the old Code, their Lordships of the Privy Council doubted whether in such a case, there would be any misjoinder. Under the present rule which is wider than the corresponding section of the old Code, it is clear that such joinder is permissible.[5] The abovementioned principle is applicable not only to suits for possession but also to suits for mere declaration.[6] The cases above referred to are cases of suits by reversioners. But the principle will apply to suits by junior members of a Hindu undivided family or by members of a Malabar tarwad to set aside alienations, and to suits by heirs or successors-in-interest to set aside alienations by the predecessors-in-interest.[7] In a suit for partition of properties belonging to a joint Hindu family by a junior member against the father, it was held that the vendees and mortgagees and others who had obtained decrees against the father which were alleged to be collusive and fraudulent, were properly joined as parties.[8]

O. 1, R. 3, Notes 10—12.

10. "In the alternative."—A suit by the transferee of a mortgage for sale against the mortgagor in which is also included a claim in the alternative for damages against the transferor, if it should appear that any portion of the debt had been discharged by the mortgagor before the transfer and so was not recoverable from the mortgagor, is not bad for misjoinder. For the right to relief arises out of the same transaction though in the alternative.[1] Similarly in suits for rent against tenants, an alternative claim against the plaintiff's co-sharers or vendors can be joined, if it is alleged by the tenants, that the co-sharers have received the whole or a portion of it from the tenants.[2] Where the plaintiff purchased certain land from A and was subsequently dispossessed by B it was held that in a suit against B for a declaration of his title, the plaintiff could also join A as defendant praying for the refund of purchase money if it be found that B is the owner.[3] Where the plaintiff filed a suit for recovery of money against two defendants alleging that one of them was his agent and had lent the other the suit amount and prayed for a decree against the other if the loan was true or, in the alternative, against the agent if he did not advance the loan, it was held that the suit was not bad for misjoinder of defendants.[4] See also the undermentioned cases.[4-a] In cases where it is doubtful which of the two defendants is liable to the plaintiff, both of them may be joined in one suit with a claim for alternative relief.[5] See R. 7, infra.

11. Award of costs in claims of alternative reliefs.—See S. 35, Note 9.

12. Ancillary relief.—Where there is one cause of action against some defendants and the relief claimed against the other defendants is only ancillary to the relief to be given to the plaintiff and not in respect of a distinct and separate cause of action, the suit is not bad for misjoinder. For example, where A and B are co-sharers of certain lands in the possession of C and D and A sues B, C and D claiming to eject C and D from his share, and for partition of his share as against B, the claim against B is merely ancillary to the relief claimed as against C and D which cannot be properly worked out without a partition of A's share. For this purpose B may be properly joined as a party to the suit.[1] O. 1, R. 3, Notes 12—15.

13. Separate trials.—It has been already said in Note 2 above that a plaintiff is entitled under this rule to join several defendants in respect of several causes of action arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions. Though O. 1, R. 2 applies in terms only to the joinder of plaintiffs and there is no corresponding rule in regard to the joinder of defendants it has been held both in England and India that the principle of that rule is applicable to the case of the joinder of defendants also.[1] If the trial of the suit is likely to be embarrassing owing to a variety of defences the Court may order separate trials or make such other order as may be expedient.[2]

14. Appeal.—If in any suit the Court holds that it is bad for misjoinder of defendants and orders the plaintiff to elect to proceed against some only, the order is a judgment within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and an appeal lies therefrom. For the order is in substance a decision that the suit as framed does not lie and the suit will have to be dismissed if the plaintiff does not comply with the order.[1]

15. Classes of cases illustrating the above principles.—See O. 1, R. 10.

Court may give judgment for or against one or more of joint parties.

1. Scope of the rule.—Clause (a) of this rule must be read with O. 1, R. 1. favour of such persons.[1] Thus, where four members of an undivided family sued the widow of a deceased co-parcener for possession of certain properties, but the Court found that only one of these was entitled to relief, it was held that judgment was properly given in his favour without any amendment.[2] But where no right to relief is alleged to exist in one of several plaintiffs and one plaintiff alone is found, as a matter of fact, to be entitled to relief this rule will not apply, and judgment cannot be given in his favour without amendment. Thus, where A and B sue C on the allegation that A alone is entitled to relief and that B is added merely as a pro forma party, but B alone is found to be entitled to relief, judgment cannot be given in his favour without amendment.[3]

Clause (b) of this rule must, similarly, be read with O. 1, R. 3. Where several defendants have been impleaded under O. 1, R. 3 but some of them alone are really found to be liable, judgment may, under this rule, be given against them without any amendment, according to their respective liabilities.[4]

An unsuccessful defendant, at whose instance another defendant is added as a party may be made liable to pay the costs of the successful defendant.[5]

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.

1. Scope of the rule.—A suit which is otherwise properly constituted shall not be bad for misjoinder merely because the defendants are not equally interested in the relief claimed in the suit.[1] Thus, a suit for accounts against A and B as agents is not necessarily bad for misjoinder merely because the plaintiff may ask for accounts as against A from 1265 to 1283 fasli and as against B, from 1281 to 1283.[2] Similarly, a suit is not bad for misjoinder merely because the relief claimed as against some of the defendants is only ancillary to the main relief claimed in the suit.[3]

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule is applicable only to suits on contracts including bills of exchange, hundies and promissory notes. The liability on a contract may be a joint one or a joint and several one or a several one. Where A becomes liable under a promise and after his death the liability survives to his heirs B, C and D, the liability of the latter is a joint and single one.[1] Where A and B jointly make a promise to pay a certain amount to C each of them also severally undertaking to pay that amount, it is a case of a joint and several liability. Where A and B, each for himself, agrees to pay a certain amount to C it is the case of several liability. This rule deals with cases of several liability and cases of joint and several liability, the legal consequences of both kinds of liability, so far as this rule is concerned, being the same.

2. Joint liability.—As has been seen in Note 1 above, a liability is joint if on the death of one of the joint promissors the liability becomes the liability of the surviving promisors and no liability devolves upon the heirs or legal representatives of the deceased promisor; survivorship is the distinguishing mark of a joint contract; where therefore there is no survivorship and the liability extends beyond the surviving debtors to the estate of a deceased debtor the liability is presumably joint and several.[1] Judged by this test the liability of A and B under a joint promise to pay C a certain sum of money is a joint and several one inasmuch as under S. 42 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, it is provided that where two or more persons have made a joint promise then unless a contrary intention appears by the contract, all such persons during their joint lives and after the death of any one of them, his representative, jointly with the survivor or survivors must fulfil the promise. There has, however, been a conflict of view on the point. It was held in the undermentioned cases[2] that a joint promise by A and B creates under S. 43 of the Contract Act, a joint and several liability. A contrary view has been expressed in the two cases noted below.[3] It is submitted that the former view seems to be the correct one.

3. Several liability.—The rule provides that the plaintiff may at his option join in one suit all or any of the persons severally liable under a contract. Thus, where, by one contract each of two persons A and B agree to pay a certain sum of money to C, A and B are severally liable under the contract and C can, under this rule either sue A and B jointly or can bring separate and successive suits against them.

4. Joint and several liability.—It has been seen in Note 2 above how a joint liability is different from a joint and several liability. Where under this rule the plaintiff sues one or some of the persons jointly and severally liable, the latter have no right to insist on the joinder of the other promisors so liable as parties to the suit.[1] But this rule is confined to liability arising out of contracts. As will be more fully discussed under R. 10 infra, where the liability is a joint one but is not contractual, it cannot be enforced without joining as defendants all the persons jointly liable.

In England the defendants can insist, even in cases of contracts, on the joinder of the other joint promisors as parties to the suit.[2]

5. Suit against one of several partners.—Section 43 of the Contract Act applies to contracts entered into with firms or partnerships. Hence, by virtue of O. 1, R. 6 a plaintiff in enforcing such a contract is not bound to implead all the members of a firm as defendants, but is entitled to sue, as he chooses, one or more of them, for the performance of the entire contract.[1]

6. Whether decree against one co-contractor precludes suit against other co-contractors.—A and B jointly promise to pay C a certain sum of money. C sues A separately and obtains a decree. He then executes the decree against A and the decree is satisfied. He cannot subsequently sue B on the same contract; because, having realised what was due to him under the contract, he has no longer any rights under it. But supposing the decree against A remains unsatisfied or is only partially satisfied, can C bring a separate suit against B for the amount remaining due to him under the contract?

On this question there is a conflict of decisions. It has been held by the High Courts of Bombay,[1] Calcutta[2] and Madras[3] that such a suit is barred. These decisions are based on the view that the contract gives rise to but one cause of action and when once that cause of action is sued on and a judgment is obtained on it, the cause of action merges in the judgment and the plaintiff has no longer any cause of action against the other co-promisor. As regards the argument based on S. 43 of the Contract Act, viz., that the plaintiff can under that section sue, as he chooses, one or more of the joint promisors, it was said that the section merely deprives a defendant of the right of being sued along with his joint promisors but does not operate to convert a single cause of action into several causes of action, so as to enable the plaintiff to file separate actions against both. On the other hand, it has been held by the Allahabad High Court[4] that a fresh suit against B is not barred under such circumstances, on the ground that S. 43 of the Contract Act makes the joint liability of a co-promisor, joint and several, and also on the ground that, inasmuch as the present rule deprives the defendants of their right to insist on their co-promisors being joined as parties, the plaintiff gets a larger right of bringing separate suits against the promisors.

It is submitted that neither of the grounds relied on can be accepted as leading to the conclusion arrived at by the Allahabad High Court. That the liability under a joint promise by A and B is joint and several does not affect the singleness of the cause of action. Nor can the deprivation of certain rights of the defendants give the plaintiff any additional right. The same observations will apply to the decision in the undermentioned case of the Calcutta High Court in which it was held that when the obligation is joint and several an unsatisfied decree against one of the promisors is not a bar to an action against the others.[5]

Suppose C sues both A and B (joint promisors) but A consents to a judgment against him. Can C thereafter prosecute the suit against B alone? It has been held by the Bombay High Court that C can do so,[6] on the ground that the doctrine of King v. Hoare "which laid down that judgment recovered against a joint promisor was a bar for a further action in respect of the same liability against the other joint promisors" ought not to be applied to the prosecution of an action already instituted.

7. "Any one contract."—The rule only applies where the defendants are liable on the same contract. It does not apply where the defendants are liable on different contracts.[1]

8. Suits on bills of exchange, hundies and promissory notes.—The drawer and the acceptor of a bill of exchange can be joined as co-defendants in a suit brought by the holder of the bill.[1] But suppose A draws a bill of exchange payable at sight on B and the latter, on presentation, refuses to accept it. In such a case, the holder of the bill has no cause of action against B and cannot add B as a co-defendant with A.[2]

This rule does not say that any party must be joined as a co-defendant to a suit on a bill or hundi. But this does not obviate the need for joining a person who may, in the circumstances of the case, be a necessary party.

Thus, where the endorsee sues the endorser for renewal of a lost cheque, the drawer also must be impleaded as the cheque cannot be renewed without his co-operation.[3]

It must be remembered that the rule is only one of procedure. It merely enables the holder of a bill to sue all the parties in one action. It does not in any way affect the liabilities of the parties. Hence, where the holder of a bill of exchange sues the drawer, the acceptor and the endorser, the decree cannot provide that the endorser should be exempt from liability until the plaintiff has exhausted his remedies against the drawer and the acceptor.[4]

(1) A plaintiff can sue two persons as defendants to recover from either the one or the other, a sum of money by way of rent for a godown when he is in doubt as to which of the two owes the rent.[2] O. 1, R. 7, Notes 1—2.

(2) A sues B for a sum of money lent to B by C, A's agent. B denies the loan but C maintains he made the loan. A, in such a case, may join C as a co-defendant in the suit praying for relief against him in the alternative.[3]

(3) Plaintiff alleged that both the first and second defendants claimed a charge for the use of certain water and prayed that the Court should determine which of the defendants was entitled to the charge, and that the other should be restrained from interfering with the plaintiff, and compelled to refund the charges he had already collected. Held, there was no misjoinder.[4]

It should be noted that ex hypothesi where a plaintiff sues different persons in the alternative, all of them cannot be made liable. Where, therefore, judgment is given against one of the defendants, the plaintiff cannot enforce it against the other.[5]

1. Legislative changes.—

The first paragraph of this rule corresponds to S. 30 of the Code of 1882 and the second paragraph corresponds to the fourth paragraph of S. 32 of that Code. The alterations effected are not very material.

2. Scope and object of rule.—The general rule is that all persons interested in a suit ought to be joined as parties to it, so that the matters involved may be finally adjudicated upon and fresh litigation over the same matters may be avoided.[1] The present rule forms an exception to this general rule. It provides that where a number of persons are similarly interested in a suit one or more of them can, with the permission of the Court, sue or be sued on behalf of themselves and the others. The rule is founded on convenience and saves the trouble and expense which would otherwise have to be incurred in such cases.[2]

The conditions for the applicability of this rule are:—

(1) The parties must be numerous.

(2) They must have the same interest in the suit.

(3) The Court's permission under the rule must be obtained.

(4) Notice must be given to the parties whom it is proposed to represent in the suit.

The rule is taken from O. 16, R. 9 of the Rules of the Supreme Court which runs as follows:—

Order 1, Rule 8—Note 2.

(1) Maung Tun Wa v. Maung Tha Kado, (1900-1907) 1 L B R 252 (254); Amrut v. Mukund, (1909) 4 Ind Cas 236 (240): 5 Nag L R 152.

"Where there are numerous parties having the same interest in one action, one or more of such parties may sue or be sued or may be authorised by the Court to defend in such action, on behalf or for the benefit of all parties so interested." It will be seen that the chief distinction between the Indian rule and the English rule is that under the latter permission is necessary only for defending a suit on behalf of others and not for suing or being sued.[3] O. 1, R. 8, Notes 2—3.

3. Numerous persons.—The first essential for the application of this rule is that numerous persons should be interested in the suit. The rule does not fix any limit to the number. In one case, it was held that the rule contemplates the case of parties too numerous to be conveniently made parties to the suit.[1] In another case, a hundred persons were held to be "numerous" within the rule.[2] And in an English case[3] it was held that thirty defendants were "numerous".

It is not necessary that the number should be capable of ascertainment. A suit is therefore maintainable on behalf of a fluctuating body, e.g., the inhabitants of a town[4] or village[5]; the members of a defined[5-a] sect[6] or caste[7] or class[8] or the followers of a particular religion, like the Mahomedan community[9] or the Hindu community.[10] In this connection it may be pointed out that a fluctuating body like a village community can own property[11] or even be a promisee under a contract.[12]

But a suit is not maintainable on behalf of the public in general.[13] This is not because the number of persons forming the public is not capable of ascertainment but because of the principle that there can be no private actions for public wrongs.

A suit on behalf of the whole Hindu community is not impeachable on the ground of the number being incapable of ascertainment. The contrary view of the Calcutta High Court in the undermentioned case[14] has been dissented from in later decisions of the same High Court.[15] But such a suit may be open to attack on another ground, namely, that the parties cannot have the "same interest" in such a case. See Note 8 below.

4. Clubs and other associations.—Bodies of persons may be registered under the Companies Act and may be authorised under the law to sue and be sued through one of their members or officers. But in the case of unincorporated associations like clubs, etc., the secretary or other officers of the club cannot sue or be sued except by obtaining permission under this rule,[1] even though he or they may have been authorised by a resolution of the association to sue or to defend a suit.[2]

5. Suit to set aside fraudulent transfers.—A suit to set aside a transfer of immoveable property on the ground that it is in fraud of the creditors of the transferor must be brought by or on behalf of all the creditors. Such a suit cannot be brought by some only of the creditors for their benefit alone.[1]

6. Suit by a member of a community in his own right.—This rule is only an enabling provision. It does not debar any member of a community from maintaining a suit in his own right although the act complained of injures other members of the community.[1]

1. Where every member of the community had an individual right to perform religious rites on a certain platform and the defendant raised a masonry structure on the platform, Held that any member of the community could sue for the removal of the structure.[2]
2. The worshippers at a dharmasala can challenge the alienation of property attached to the dharmasala, as persons interested in the preservation of the property.[3]
3. It has been held that individual tax-payers can sue for an injunction restraining a Municipality from misapplying its funds.[4]
4. A, a creditor of B obtains a decree against B and attaches certain property as belonging to B. The attachment is set aside at the instance of C, who claims to be the transferee of the property from B. Then A sues for a declaration that the alienation is fraudulent and does not affect his right to attach the property under his decree. The suit is maintainable.[5]
5. Plaintiffs as members of a certain caste claimed for themselves and their fellow caste men, the exclusive right of entry and worship in the sanctuary of a temple. The defendants who belonged to some other caste entered the sanctuary and worshipped there, thus infringing the rights of plaintiffs' caste. Held that individual members of the latter caste could sue for the personal injury suffered by them due to the pollution of their sanctuary.[6]
6. Every Mahomedan worshipper in a mosque has an individual right to sue any one who interferes with his right.[7] Hence individual Mahomedan worshippers can sue to set aside an alienation of endowed property,[8] or for declaration that certain property is wakf property.[9]

Although, where a number of persons have similar but distinct rights any one of them may sue in his own right, yet, the Court may, on grounds of convenience, require the plaint to be amended and converted into a representative action.[10] Where the suit is not brought in a representative capacity but in an individual capacity the decree in the suit does not bind members of the class who are not actually parties on record.[11] The fact that the suit is against a defendant in his individual capacity does not preclude him from raising a question of general custom, although the adjudication cannot bind members of the community who are not on the record as parties. If the plaintiff wishes to have the question of common right tried out he should amend his plaint and allege that the suit is brought against the defendant personally and as representing others claiming the same rights.[12]

7. Suit to establish or negative a public right.—It has been seen in S. 91, Note 1 that a private person cannot maintain a suit in respect of a public right except under the provisions of S. 91, unless he is able to show that he has suffered special damage. Where numerous persons, not being the general public (e.g., a particular community) suffer special injury in respect of a public right, any one of such persons may, under this rule, bring a representative suit on behalf of all such persons.[1] Where there is no question of a public right at all, no special injury need be proved. Thus suits may be brought by village communities to establish their rights in connection with village pathways,[2] village wells[3] or ghats or banks of rivers.[4]

A person may sue for a declaration that he is the owner of certain land free from any right of the public to use it as a highway. In such a case the plaintiff may implead any one who formally claims to use the land as a public highway. He need not proceed under O. 1, R. 8 against all persons who may deny his right. But the decree in such a case will only bind the actual defendants.[5]

8. Having the same interest.—The persons on whose behalf a suit is brought must have the same interest in the suit. The interest need not be a proprietary one. Thus the disciples of a mutt can sue for setting aside an improper alienation of the mutt properties and for restoration thereof to the head of the mutt.[1] Similarly the worshippers at a temple can sue for setting aside an alienation of temple property[2] and, where there is no trustee or manager, even for the recovery of the temple property.[3] The expression "same interest" is not confined to joint or concurrent interest.[4] It applies also to cases where the interest is similar though distinct.[5] But an interest merely as a member of the public is not a sufficient interest for the purposes of this rule.[6] As has been observed in Adamson v. Arumugam[7] the rule "is rather designed to allow one or more persons to represent a class having special interests than to allow such persons to sue on behalf of the general public." For examples of cases where several persons were held to have the same interest in the suit see the undermentioned cases.[8] It has been held by the High Court of Lahore that the defendants in a partition suit may, in certain circumstances, have the same interest in the suit and that O. 1, R. 8 may apply to such a case.[9]

O. 1, R. 8, Note 8.

Where the parties do not have the same interest in the suit, they must all be on the record.[10] Thus, in a suit for diverting Government water for non-riparian purposes, where each plaintiff has a distinct cause of action and also has to prove damage, a representative suit cannot be brought on behalf of all the riparian owners.[11] Similarly in a suit for contribution all the co-promisors must be before the Court.[12]

The rule does not require that the whole body on whose behalf the proceedings are taken should be of the same opinion. The true principle underlying the rule is that the suit should, in form, be constituted into a representative one in order to prevent the defendant from being vexed by similar suits by others. "If a substantial majority of the members of a body are of one opinion an order may be made by the Court giving permission under this rule, though there is a small or negligible minority holding a different opinion." This is the view of the Madras High Court.[13] It has been held by the Bombay High Court that where a community is divided into two clear factions, one faction favouring and the other opposing the suit, it cannot be said that the community has the same interest in the suit and a suit cannot be brought under O. 1, R. 8.[14]

O. 1, R. 8, Note 8.

It is not a condition precedent to a suit under O. 1, R. 8 that the consent of the community should be obtained beforehand for the suit.[14-a] Nor is it necessary to hold a meeting of the caste or community.[15] But if a meeting is convened and the meeting is irregularly held, the consent expressed at such a meeting is vitiated and O. 1, R. 8 will not apply.[16] In such a case, the consent of the various members expressed subsequently cannot help the plaintiff because it cannot be taken to represent the real sense of the community.[17] Where a meeting is properly held and certain persons are duly appointed to sue on behalf of the whole body, the fact that some members of the body subsequently side with the defendants does not take away from the representative character of the suit.[18]

Under this rule, a suit can be brought on behalf of a body against some of its own members.[19]

The rule says that where numerous persons have the same interest in one suit, one or more of such persons may sue on behalf of all. Hence, the plaintiff must have himself the same interest as the persons he seeks to represent.[20] Thus, a suit to establish the rights of the sweepers and chamars could be filed only by persons belonging to those two castes and not by outsiders.[21] Where, however, A as representing a body has a certain interest in the suit in common with all the other members of the body and has also a special right peculiar to himself in respect of the same matter, the two interests may be combined in the same suit under O. 1, R. 1.[22]

The rule is regulative and not constitutive. It only deals with procedure and does not create any right to sue. It presupposes the existence of the right of suit in the community. Hence, where there is no right to sue at all in the community, the rule does not apply.[23] Thus, where the property of a trust is vested in a trustee it has been held that the trustee alone can sue for recovery of possession of the property and not the worshippers in the temple.[24] Similarly, where a suit is barred under the provisions of any law, it cannot be maintained merely because it is on behalf of numerous persons within O. 1, R. 8. Thus S. 92 (2) forbids suits in relation to public charitable and religious trusts otherwise than under the section, where the relief claimed is covered by the section.[25] Where, however, S. 92 does not cover the case, the suit may be brought under O. 1, R. 8 although it relates to a public trust.[26]

9. Representative suit for damages not maintainable.—No representative action can lie where the sole relief sought is damages, because they have to be proved separately in the case of each plaintiff.[1] In such a case the plaintiffs cannot be deemed to have the "same interest" in the suit. Hence, O. 1, R. 8 does not enable a representative action for damages in respect of defamation to be brought on behalf of a number of persons.[2]

10. With the permission of the Court.—As a matter of procedure, the Court ought to insist on the permission prescribed by R. 8 being obtained before a matter is allowed to be fought out in a representative capacity.[1] If, in such a case, the plaintiff refuses to amend the plaint after being required to do so, the suit should be dismissed.[2] But an objection on the ground of want of permission cannot be raised for the first time in appeal.[3] At any rate, when objection is taken before the appellate Court, the suit should not be dismissed but should be remanded for the procedure provided by this rule being followed.[4]

Permission under the rule, obtained in the trial Court enures for the appellate Court also and no fresh permission is necessary in respect of the appellate Court.[5]

O. 1, R. 8, Notes 10—14.

The Court should exercise a judicial discretion in granting permission to a person to sue in a representative capacity under the rule.[6]

11. At what stage of suit permission is to be granted.—The proper course is to obtain permission before the suit is instituted. But the permission may be granted even after the institution of the suit,[1] and even though it had been refused on a previous occasion.[2]

12. Form of permission.—The permission under the rule need not be express. It may be gathered from the proceedings of the Court in which the suit was instituted.[1] The dictum of Stuart, C. J. to the contrary in the undermentioned case[2] is not good law. See the undermentioned case[3] where it was held on the language of the Court's order that permission was not given. Permission under the rule must be to definitely named persons.[4]

13. Who may apply for permission.—Where a suit is brought by certain persons.

(1) on behalf of themselves and as representing others or

(2) against certain persons on behalf of themselves and as representing others, the application for permission should be made by the plaintiff.[1] But where a suit against a number of persons is sought to be defended by one of them, the application should generally be made by the defendant who seeks to defend on behalf of all. The persons to whom permission has been granted under the rule must act together. If permission is granted to a certain number of persons and some of them do not join in the suit, the remaining persons alone cannot avail themselves of the permission and sue.[1-a]

14. May be sued.—Where the inhabitants of a village claim a right of way over plaintiff's land the plaintiff with the Court's permission, may sue one or more of them on behalf of all, to negative the right.[1] The consent of the defendant on the record is not necessary to enable the Court to permit the plaintiff to sue the defendant as representing the whole community.[2]

O. 1, R. 8, Notes 14—17.

15. "May defend".—This clause comes into operation when the plaintiff has impleaded all the persons interested as defendants, and one of them wishes to defend on behalf of all other defendants. In such a case the Court may permit him to so defend the suit on behalf of all.

16. Notice of the institution of the suit.—The provision as to the issue of notice of the institution of the suit, is a peremptory one.[1] But it is the duty of the Court to issue such notice[2] and a suit cannot therefore be dismissed for failure of the party to move the Court to perform the duties imposed on it by the section.[3] The notice may be given whenever, the defect is pointed out. If the defect is noticed by the appellate Court, the suit may be remanded for the notice being given.[4]

We have seen in Note 12 ante that the permission under the rule need not be express but may be inferred from the proceedings. In some of such cases, obviously, notice of the institution of the suit could not have been given. The absence of notice therefore could not affect the representative character of the suit, if in point of substance it was a representative one. This is the view of the Madras High Court.[5] It has however been held by the High Court of Patna that when notice is not given as required by this rule, the suit is not a representative one and that the decree will bind only the parties actually on the record.[6]

A notice under the rule should specify the names of the persons to whom permission is to be given, so that the persons interested may have an opportunity of knowing who have been selected to represent them.[7] But the non-specification of the names is not necessarily fatal to the suit.[8] At any rate, the decree in the suit will always bind the persons who actually take part in the suit.[9]

17. Title of suit.—Where a suit is brought by or against persons in a representative capacity the fact should be stated not only in the plaint (See

O. 1, R. 8, Notes 17—21.

O. 7, R. 4) but also in the title of the suit.[1] See also Appendix A forms 1 and 2. But the suit may be a representative one though the cause title may not show it. In India the substance and not the form of pleadings should be considered.[2]

18. Addition of parties.—The effect of an order under the rule is that the parties who have obtained permission to sue as representatives have the conduct of the suit on behalf of all those they purport to represent. Sub-rule 2 provides that any person on whose behalf a suit is instituted or defended under sub-Rule 1 may apply to the Court to be added as a party to the suit.[1] Such a person must show that the conduct of the suit is not in proper hands and that his interests will be seriously affected to his prejudice if he is not joined as a party. The reason is that there is considerable delay caused by a fresh party coming in and the costs of other parties are consequently increased.[2] The application must also be made without unnecessary delay.[3]

19. Suit in the name of wrong plaintiff.—Under O. 1, R. 10, sub-Rule 1, where through a bona fide mistake, a suit has been instituted in the name of a wrong person as plaintiff, the Court can allow any other person to be substituted as plaintiff. Suppose, A describing himself as a creditor of B sues on behalf of himself and the other creditors of B and it turns out that A is not a creditor of B. A cannot continue the suit, as O. 1, R. 8 presupposes a community of interest between the plaintiff and the other persons he is allowed to represent. But can C, who is an admitted creditor of B be substituted for A under O. 1, R. 10, sub-Rule 1 in such circumstances? It is conceived that he can.[1] There is nothing in O. 1, R. 10 or R. 8 to exclude the application of Rule 10 to cases arising under R. 8.

20. Addition of parties after decree.—Where in a suit under this rule, the plaintiffs on the record neglect to execute the decree in their favour, the Court may add other persons as parties to enable them to execute the decree.[1]

21. Decree in a representative suit.—Where a person sues or is sued on behalf of himself and as representing others, it is called a representative suit. To such a suit Explanation VI of S. 11 applies and a decree passed in such a suit enures to the benefit of, or binds, all the persons so represented in the suit, although they are not actually parties on the record.[1] A representative suit is not confined to suits brought under O. 1, R. 8.[2] It includes cases where, under the substantive law certain persons are entitled by virtue of their position to sue on behalf of themselves and others, e.g., the manager of a joint Hindu family[3] and the Karnavan of a Malabar Tarwad.[4]

O. 1, R. 8, Notes 21—22.

A decision in a representative suit under this rule, as in any other case, operates as res judicata only when it is given on the merits[5] and only so far as the rights litigated are common to the person suing or being sued and those whom he represents.[6] Further it can bind the persons represented only with respect to their property which the person suing or sued represented, although the parties on record may be personally liable. Hence, a decree for injunction which can only be enforced through the personal obedience of the defendant is not binding on the persons who were not parties actually on the record but against whom a representative suit was filed.[7]

If the alleged common right in a representative suit under this rule is negatived, the suit should be dismissed; the Court cannot, in such a suit declare the rights of individuals as distinguished from the rights of the class of persons on whose behalf the suit is brought[8] though it is open to pass a decree in favour of persons forming a smaller number out of a larger class.[9]

Where a suit is not a representative one, Explanation VI to S. 11 does not apply and the decree cannot bind any one who is not a party to it.[10]

22. Costs in representative suit.—Under S. 35 of the Code, the costs of all suits are within the discretion of the Court and the Court can determine by whom or out of what property the costs are to be paid. As a general rule only parties on the record are liable to pay costs. (See S. 35

O. 1, R. 8, Notes 22–24.

Note 9). This rule applies also to representative suits. Hence, in such suits, as a general rule, costs should be awarded only against parties on the record but not against other persons whom the parties on the record may represent.[1] But this is not an inflexible rule. In exceptional cases, costs may be ordered to be paid even by persons who are not parties on the record but on whose behalf, or for whose benefit, the suit has been brought or defended. The Court may also, in a fit case, direct the costs to be paid out of any property which may belong to the community represented in the action. In any case, great caution is necessary in making an order as to costs in a representative suit.[2] In the undermentioned case[3] the next friend of a minor plaintiff in a representative suit was ordered to pay the costs.

23. Compromise of representative suit.—It was held in the undermentioned case[1] following the English case of Jenkins v. Robertson[2] that persons instituting a suit on behalf of the public (c.g., a suit under S. 92, C. P. C.) have no right to bind the public by a compromise decree. In a recent case of the Privy Council, however, their Lordships left it open whether the law in India under S. 11, Civil Procedure Code is the same as that stated above.[3] They have, however, indicated that Jenkins v. Roberts was based on Scotch Law and had been explained in Re South American and Mexicon Co., [(1895) 1 Ch. 37]. But in a representative suit under O. 1, R. 8, the representative is dominus litis until judgment and he can therefore discontinue or compromise the suit.[4]

24. Abatement of suits and appeals.—A sues on behalf of himself and numerous other persons under O. 1, R. 8. A dies pending the suit. Does the suit abate? No.[1] The reason is twofold: firstly the persons represented are not the "legal representatives" of the deceased plaintiff within the meaning of S. 2 (11) of the Code and O. 22, R. 3 does not apply to such a case;[2] secondly the persons represented are already parties to the suit constructively though the conduct of the suit is in the hands of a particular person to whom leave has been given, and any one of such persons can continue the suit after the plaintiff's death.[3] The application to continue the suit should be made under O. 1, R. 8, sub-Rule 2[4] or O. 1, R. 10, sub-Rule 2.[5] No period is fixed within which such application should be made, but the High Court of Madras expressed an opinion in the undermentioned case[6] that such an application will be governed by Art. 181 of the Limitation Act. Suppose now that A sues B on behalf of himself and numerous other persons and a decree is passed in favour of A. B appeals and, during the pendency of the appeal, one of the persons represented by A dies, and his legal representatives are not brought on the record. Does the appeal abate? No.[7] The reason is, that the principle of the abatement of a suit by the death of a party has no application where the deceased was not a party to the suit eo nomine. Where the suit as brought is not a representative one, there is a difference of opinion in the Lahore High Court as to whether the fact that, in appeal, some respondents are allowed to represent others will not prevent abatement on the death of the persons so represented. One set of cases hold that it will not.[8] The other that it will.[8-a] In the following case[8-b] forty persons instituted a suit against A. All the forty persons joined as plaintiffs and the suit was not brought in a representative capacity. A decree was passed in favour of the plaintiffs. A appealed from the decree, but obtained permission from the Court that the appeal should be defended by four out of the forty decree-holders in the lower Court. the appeal, died. A failed to bring on record their legal representatives within the period of limitation. Held, that the appeal abated under such circumstances, on the ground that all the forty persons being actually on the record as plaintiffs in the lower Court, the suit was not a representative suit, and that although some of the respondents may be allowed by the Court to defend the appeal on behalf of themselves, and others, the appellant must join as parties to the appeal all the persons who were actually plaintiffs on the record in the lower Court and in whose favour a decree had been passed. A fortiori, where, in such a case, one of the respondents selected to represent the others dies, and his legal representatives are not brought on the record within the prescribed period of limitation, the appeal abates.[9]

A suit was brought against B as a trustee representing a temple and C as representing a certain community. Pending the suit B died and another trustee was appointed. Held, that the new trustee should be brought on the record, so that the idol and the temple properties might be represented in the suit.[10] As to the procedure to be adopted in cases where parties sue or are sued in a representative capacity with the permission of the Court under this rule and one or more of them die pending the suit or appeal see the case noted below.[10-a] non-joinder also or was confined to cases of misjoinder alone. See the undermentiond cases.[1] These cases can be only of academic interest under the present Code, as the new rule makes it clear that it applies to cases of non-joinder of parties as well as of mis-joinder.

2. Scope of the rule.—This rule provides that no suit shall be defeated by reason of the misjoinder or non-joinder of parties, but that the Court may, in every suit, deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it. There are, however, cases in which the Court cannot, under the substantive law, deal with the rights and interests of the parties actually before it in the absence of certain other persons. Thus the Court cannot, in a suit by a co-trustee for possession of the trust-property, grant any relief to the plaintiff in the absence of all the other co-trustees on the record.[1] The reason is that all the co-trustees together represent a single and indivisible right which cannot be adjudicated upon and no effective decree passed by the Court in their absence. In such a case, the necessary parties may be added under O. 1, R. 10.[2] Where they are not so added, the suit will be dismissed, not by reason of the non-joinder of parties but by reason of the fact that the Court cannot, under the substantive law, grant any relief to the parties actually on the record. O. 1, R. 9 does not affect such cases, and cannot be relied upon to dispense with the joinder of such necessary parties.[2-a]

This rule does not apply to cases where there is a misjoinder of causes of action as well as of parties.[3]

3. Misjoinder of parties.—O. 1, R. 1 deals with the question "who may be joined as plaintiffs in a suit". O. 1, R. 3 deals with the question "who may be joined as defendants in a suit". If persons are joined as plaintiffs in the same suit in any case not covered by O. 1, R. 1 there is misjoinder of plaintiffs. Similarly, if persons are joined as defendants to the same suit in any case not covered by O. 1, R. 3, there is a misjoinder of defendants.

A misjoinder of parties is not fatal to a suit.[1] Where there is a misjoinder of parties the Court has power under O. 1, R. 10 (2) to strike out the names of the persons improperly joined, and to allow the suit to be proceeded with. There is no misjoinder of plaintiffs where one of the plaintiffs is entitled to all the estate sued for and the name of another person is added as a co-plaintiff merely as a matter of extra caution.[2]

4. Misjoinder of parties and causes of action—Multifariousness.—O. 2, Rr. 3, 4 and 5 deal with joinder of causes of action. Where, in the same suit several causes of action are joined in contravention of these provisions there is a misjoinder of causes of action. A misjoinder of causes of action may be coupled with a misjoinder of plaintiffs or of defendants. In such a case there is multifariousness or a misjoinder of parties and of causes of action. As has been seen already in Note 2 above, this rule does not apply to such a case.

5. Non-joinder of parties.—The rule applies to non-joinder of parties as well as misjoinder. Hence, the failure to join any parties does not per se entail the dismissal of a suit.[1] But there is a distinction between the non-joinder of necessary parties and non-joinder of proper parties. Necessary parties are those in whose absence the Court cannot pass an effective decree at all. Proper parties are those whose presence is necessary in order to enable the Court to completely and adequately adjudicate on all the matters involved in the suit. (See Notes under O. 1, R. 10.) If the non-joinder is only of proper (as contrasted with necessary) parties, it can never be, in itself, fatal to the suit.[2] In such a case the Court can, under this rule, deal with the matters in controversy in so far as the parties actually before the Court are concerned,[2-a] or it may order the addition of the parties under

But in the case of necessary parties, the Court cannot as has already been seen in Note 2 above, decide the suit at all in their absence.[3] But even in such a case the Court cannot immediately proceed to dismiss the suit without giving an opportunity to the plaintiff to amend the plaint by adding the absent parties.[4] If, however, on being required to add a necessary party, the plaintiff refuses to do so, the suit is liable to be dismissed.[5] See Note 2 ante. O 1, R. 10. suit has been instituted through a bona fide mistake,[3] and that it is necessary for the determination of the real matter in dispute[4] so to do, order any other person to be substituted or added as plaintiff upon such terms as the Court thinks just. [5]

Court may strike out or add parties.

(2) The Court may at any stage of the proceedings,[32] either upon or without the application of either party,[12] and on such terms as may appear to the Court to be just, order that the name of any party improperly joined,[31] whether as plaintiff or defendant, be struck out,[33] and that the name of any person who ought to have been joined,[13] whether as plaintiff or defendant, or whose presence before the Court may be necessary[14] in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit,[30] be added.

(3) No person shall be added as a plaintiff suing without a next friend or as the next friend of a plaintiff under any disability without his consent.[38]

Where defendant added, plaint to be amended

(4) Where a defendant is added, the plaint shall, unless the Court otherwise directs, be amended in such manner as may be necessary, and amended copies of the summons and of the plaint shall be served on the new defendant and, if the Court thinks fit, on the original defendant.

(5) Subject to the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, XV of 1877,[41] section 22, the proceedings as against any person added as defendant shall be deemed to have begun only on the service of the summons.

SUB-RULE (1).

1. Legislative changes.—

(1) The words "with his or their consent" in S. 27 of the old Code corresponding to sub-Rule (1) of this order has been omitted.

(2) The words "at any stage of the suit" are new. See Note 6, infra.

2. Scope of the sub-rule.—This sub-rule deals with the substitution or addition of plaintiffs after an action is brought. It contemplates cases in which a suit is brought by a plaintiff, who subsequently discovers that he cannot get the full relief he seeks without the joinder of some other person as co-plaintiff, and cases, where it is found that some other person, and not the original plaintiff is entitled to the relief claimed. In the former contingency, a new party has to be added and in the latter, a new party has to be substituted as plaintiff.[1] To bring a case within this sub-Rule it must be shown that

(1) the action was commenced in the name of the original plaintiff by a bona fide mistake, and

(2) the substitution or addition is necessary for the determination of the real matter in dispute.

The words "if the suit is brought in the name of the wrong person as plaintiff" do not exclude altogether persons who may institute the suit without any right to do so[2] but the case must fall within the provisions of the sub-rule. Unless, therefore, the two conditions of the sub-rule are satisfied a defendant is entitled to the dismissal of a suit brought by an unauthorised person and the defect cannot be cured by the addition or substitution of persons who might have brought the suit.[3] The right of the plaintiff to be added must be same as the right in suit; in other words a substitute can be added only to enforce, the right pleaded.[4] A Court has, therefore, no power to import into the case as co-plaintiff a person who has a different cause of action inconsistent with that of the original plaintiff.[5] This sub-rule does not apply to applications under O. 22, R. 3,[6] or to cases of non-joinder of necessary parties,[7] or to cases in which a suit has been instituted against a wrong person as defendant.[8] It applies to Revenue Courts also.[9] As to its applicability to appeals, see S. 107, Note 16, ante.

3. Bona fide mistake.—The first condition for the applicability of this sub-Rule is, as has been seen already in Note 2 above, that the action was commenced in the name of the original plaintiff by a bona fide mistake.[1]

The mistake may be one of fact or of law.[2] A mistake has been held to be bona fide where O. 1, R. 10, Note 3.

(1) It is not deliberate but one honestly made.[3]

(2) The point is doubtful.[4]

(3) The Court of first instance and the appellate Court take different views on a point on which the plaintiff's right of action depends.[5]

On the other hand, there can be no room for any bona fide mistake where it is persisted in after objection[6] or where, to his own knowledge, the original plaintiff has no right to sue on the date of the plaint.[7]

Illustrations.

1. A, the agent of B, files a suit in his own name by a bona fide mistake. The Court can, under this sub-rule, substitute the name of the principal B for that of the original plaintiff A.[8]
2. A, the administratrix of the estate of B sued on a mortgage bond in favour of B. She was unaware of the fact that her powers as administratrix had come to an end before the date of suit and was honestly under the impression that she had such powers. Held, that the person entitled to sue may be substituted for A under this sub-rule.[9]
3. A claiming title under a tamliknama executed in his favour by B sues for possession of certain properties under a bona fide mistake that the tamliknama covered that property; held that on discovery of the mistake, B, the real owner could be added as a co-plaintiff under this sub-Rule.[10]
4. A, the Official Assignee of Bombay was constituted the attorney of B, the Official Assignee of Madras, to institute a suit on the latter's behalf in Bombay. Instead of suing as "A, attorney of B" he sued as "A, Official Assignee of Bombay" owing to a bona fide mistake; held that the plaint could be amended by substituting "A, attorney of B" for "A, Official Assignee of Bombay".[11]
5. A instituted a suit against B in respect of certain properties. At the date of the suit he had already been declared to be a trespasser on that property; held, that A could not be treated as having instituted the suit by a bona fide mistake and that the true owner could not be substituted under this sub-Rule.[12]

6. A sued B for possession of certain lands. B contested the suit on the ground that A had transferred the whole of his interest in the lands to C and that, therefore, he had no title to sue. A maintained his right stating that the transfer never became operative. This was found to be false. Thereupon A applied for adding C as a co-plaintiff; held, that the falsity of his plea negatived any bona fides on his part, and that the amendment could not be allowed.[13]

4. "Necessary for the determination of the real matter in dispute".—Under this rule it is essential that, in addition to the existence of a bona fide mistake, the substitution or addition should be necessary for the determination of the real matter in dispute.[1]

5. "Upon such terms as the Court thinks just".—The terms will be such as the Court thinks just under the particular circumstances of the case. Thus the Court may order the payment of costs up to the time of amendment.[1] In the undermentioned case,[2] where a defendant was added under sub-Rule 2, the Court made the order that the defendant should consent to be bound by all the previous proceedings in the suit and by any order that the Court might make as to the costs of those proceedings.

6. "At any stage of the suit".—The Court may allow the amendment at any stage of the suit. Thus it can add a party before the decree is actually drawn up[1] or after the matter has been referred to arbitration,[2] or even in second appeal.[3] Where the appellate Court substitutes a new plaintiff for the wrong one, and remands the case to the original Court there must be a de novo trial.[4]

SUB-RULES 2 TO 5.

9. Legislative changes.—

1. Under S. 32 of the old Code corresponding to this sub-Rule, the Court could add parties at any time and even without any application therefor. But it could not strike out parties except on the application of a party made on or before the first hearing. Under this sub-Rule the Court has power to strike out or add parties at any stage of the proceedings with or without any application.

2. The first portion of S. 32 of the old Code empowering the Court to transpose a plaintiff as a defendant or a defendant as a plaintiff, has been omitted as unnecessary in view of the fact that the power to add or strike out parties includes the power to transpose them as well.[1] O. 1, R. 10, Notes 9—10.

3. Under S. 33 of the old Code corresponding to sub-Rule 4, amended copies of the summons as well as of the plaint had to be served on the original defendant. Under sub-Rule 4, such service is necessary only if the Court thinks fit.

10. Scope and applicability of sub-Rule (2).—This sub-rule corresponds to the second sentence of O. XVI, R. 11 of the English Rules.[1] The object of the rule is to bring before the Court, at the same time, all the persons, who are parties to disputes relating to one subject-matter, so that the disputes may all be determined at the same time without the delay, inconvenience, and expense of separate actions and trials,[2] and the principle underlying the rule is, that the Court should put itself in the position of being able to effectually and completely adjudicate upon, and settle all the questions involved in the suit.[3]

The sub-Rule gives a wide discretion to the Court to meet every case of defect of parties[4] but is subject to two limitations:—

(1) The Court has no power to join a person as a party if he could not have been originally impleaded under O. 1, Rr. 1 or 3.[5]

(2) The presence of the person added must be necessary to effectually and completely adjudicate upon and settle all points involved in the suit.[6]

The discretion also should be exercised in a reasonable manner so as not to cause inconvenience or embarrassment.[7]

O. 1, R 10, Notes 10–11.

The sub-Rule does not deal with the deletion of reliefs,[8] or with the substitution of parties[9] but only with striking out or addition of parties. It provides for the addition of any person who ought to have been joined and of any person whose presence is necessary to enable the Court to give a complete and effectual adjudication. The former is called a necessary party and the latter, a proper party. The distinction between this sub-Rule and O. 1, R. 3 is, that while the latter refers to the action of the plaintiff at the time of the presentation of the plaint in joining, as defendants, parties against whom the right to relief is alleged to exist, the former refers to the action of the Court, at a stage subsequent to the presentation of the plaint in adding parties.[10]

The sub-Rule applies also to proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894[11] and to suits under S. 92 of the Code.[12] It will also cover the case of an application to implead as parties, the legal representatives of a deceased defendant in their individual capacity.[13] It has been held not to apply to proceedings under the Divorce Act[14] nor to enable a Court to adjudicate in a suit, a general question which is of interest to a whole community, by adopting the expedient of joining a member of that community to the suit as a co-plaintiff.[15]

11. Addition of parties—General.—As has been observed in Note 10 above, this sub-Rule provides for the addition of only two classes of persons, namely necessary parties, i.e., persons who ought to have been joined as parties, and proper parties, i.e., persons without whose presence the questions in the suit cannot be completely and effectually adjudicated upon. Where a person is neither a necessary nor a proper party the Court has no jurisdiction to add him as a party under this sub-Rule.[1]

No person can bring himself or any one else on the record of a suit except with the cognizance or leave of the Court.[2] Further, it is conceived, that an order of the Court is necessary before a person is validly added as a party; the mere fact that the decree includes his name would not amount to an order for joinder of parties under O. 1, R. 10, sub-Rule 2.[3]

The question of the joinder of necessary or proper parties is not a matter of substantive right but is merely one of procedure[4] and does not confer on the persons so joined any new rights or rights adverse to those of the others.[5] As has been seen in Note 10 ante, the Court has a wide discretion in the matter of the joinder of a necessary or proper party.[6] It will ordinarily be exercised in favour of a person who applies in proper time.[7] Even in the absence of an application the Court should not, as a rule, dismiss a suit for non-joinder of a necessary or proper party but should add him as a party of its own motion or direct the plaintiff to apply for that purpose.[8] The discretion will not, however, be exercised in favour of an applicant who applies to be added as a party, where the application is made at a late stage of the case[9] or where the person sought to be added is only a proper party and the plaintiff opposes such application.[10]

O. 1, R. 10, Note 11.

The trial Court cannot add parties after the suit has been carried out of it into the Court of appeal.[11] The Court of appeal has, however, the same powers as that of the original Court in the matter of addition of parties to the suit, or respondents to the appeal.[12] In fact, the appellate Court should see, before deciding the appeal, that all the necessary parties are brought on the record.[13] Where, therefore, it finds it necessary to have certain persons before it, the proper course is not to return the plaint for amendment, but to add them as parties itself and remand the case for trial[14] or to remand the case to the lower Court directing it to add such persons as parties, and then try the case.[15] But the discretionary power should be exercised with caution.[16]

O. 1, R. 10, Notes 11—12.

Where a person applies to be added as a party appellant, the test is whether he can urge any of the grounds upon which the validity of the Court's order is called in question by the appellant already on record; if he cannot, he ought not to be added.[17] Nor will the Court's discretion be exercised in favour of a party who has resisted the objection as to non-joinder in the lower Court.[18]

The High Court has, in second appeal, no power to add parties after it has remanded the case to the lower Court.[19] There is a conflict of view as to whether the High Court can, in second appeal, add a person as a party if he was not a party to the appeal before the lower appellate Court. According to the High Court of Allahabad it cannot.[20] According to the High Courts of Calcutta,[21] Madras,[22] and Patna[23] it can. The Allahabad High Court rested its view solely on S. 559 of the Code of 1882 corresponding to O. 41, R. 20 of the Code and did not advert to Ss. 27, 32 and 582 of that Code corresponding to O. 1, R. 10 and S. 107 of the present Code which give ample power to the Court to add parties. It is submitted that the Allahabad view is not correct. There is also a conflict of opinion as to whether a Court of second appeal can add a person who was not a party to the original suit itself. The Allahabad,[24] Bombay,[25] and Lahore[26] High Courts hold that it cannot, while the Calcutta High Court holds that it can.[27] It is submitted with respect that the latter view is correct. If, in order to prevent multiplicity of suits, the first Court has power to add new parties to the suit, there is no reason why the powers of the appellate Court, in that respect should be restricted. It has been held by the Lower Burma Chief Court[28] that a Court of second appeal has no power to substitute one defendant for another in the plaint or record of the original suit, nor one appellant for another in the record of the first appeal.

12. "Either upon or without the application of either party."—It is not generally the province of the Court to force the plaintiff in a case to implead particular persons as parties.[1] Accordingly the Court, will not, as a rule, act except on the application of the parties[2] and unless such application contains definite allegations of fact upon which a liability is imputed to the person sought to be impleaded.[3] In proper cases, however, this sub-rule empowers the Court to act suo motu[4] on the application of the person seeking to be made a party[5] or even without it.[6] A Court cannot, however, of its own motion add a receiver as a defendant when the leave of the Court appointing the receiver has not been obtained.[7]

Where a person applies to be made a party, what the Court ought to see is whether the suit cannot be determined owing to his absence, or whether he will be prejudiced by his not being joined as a party.[8] The position of a person who is made a defendant on his own application, is very different from that of a person who is impleaded without any such application, in that the former has to make out a prima facie case before the plaintiff can be asked to meet it[9] while, so far as the latter is concerned, he can claim to have his pleas fully heard and determined.[10]

Where a person is added under this sub-Rule, the evidence already on the record cannot be used against him without his consent.[11] Where a person has been made a plaintiff a motion to strike out his name can only be made by himself.[12]

The addition of a party will not shift the burden of proof from the plaintiffs who are bound to prove their own case as against the original defendant.[13]

An application of a person to be added as a co-plaintiff cannot be treated as an application under O. 22, R. 10 of the Code.[14]

13. "Who ought to have been joined."—A person who ought to have been joined as a party is called a necessary party. They are persons necessary to the constitution of the suit, i.e., persons in whose absence no effective decree at all can be passed.[1] Thus where several persons have a joint right of action[2] such as co-trustees,[3] all must join in suing. In a suit to set aside an order for rateable distribution all persons interested in the distribution are necessary parties.[4] A receiver appointed after the institution of the suit is a necessary party.[5] But an Official Assignee is not a necessary party in a suit to recover a money debt from an insolvent.[6] In a suit for a declaration that certain pottahs were forgeries, all persons who claim under those pottahs must be made parties.[7] Where A sued B for arrears of rent of a house but did not implead G who had already purchased the house and had got his title declared against A in a Civil Court, it was held that G was a necessary party.[8]

But a person who is only indirectly or remotely interested, is not a necessary party.[9] Thus all persons interested in the right of easement are not necessary parties to the suit where the cause of action on the pleadings is against those persons only who are alleged to have interfered with the plaintiff's right.[10]

A married English woman having an English domicile can sue in India in respect of a mortgage due to her, without joining her husband as a party even though the statutes in England which have freed married women from disability have not been extended to this country.[11]

14. "Whose presence before the Court may be necessary."—A person is a proper party if his presence before the Court is necessary to enable it to effectually and completely adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit.[1] In other words the expression "proper party" means the party who may be interested in the result of the suit and who may have a right to seek the assistance of the Court in coming to a decision on the point in

1. X executes a mortgage in favour of A, who is a benamidar for B. A institutes a suit against X on the mortgage. B, the real owner may be added as a party.[5]
2. A, one of the relations of a deceased person brings an administrative suit against the other relations. The status of such relations as heirs is not denied. B applies to be added as a party alleging that he is an adopted son of the deceased. He can be added as a party in order to avoid multiplicity of suits.[6]
3. A, an administrator of the estate of a deceased person sues B, one of the heirs of the deceased, for profits, on the ground that he acted as executor de son tort. In such a suit the other heirs of the deceased may be added in order to avoid needless litigation.[7]
4. A, alleging that he is the adopted son of B, deceased, sues C, the widow for possession of certain properties of the deceased. In such a suit, the reversioners to the estate of B, who dispute such adoption may be added as parties in order to protect their interests.[8]
5. A, a legatee under a will, sues B, the executor, for a legacy. The estate is not sufficient to pay all the legacies in full. Other legatees under the same will may be added as parties for the protection of the executor, and so that if any rateable abatement is to be made, it may be done in a manner binding on all the legatees.[9]
6. In a suit against the owners of a ship, the plaint was allowed to be amended by adding the ship as a party defendant.[10]
7. A institutes an interpleader suit against B and C. D applies to be added as a party alleging that he has a right to the amount in suit. He may be added even though both the plaintiff and the defendants oppose such joinder.[11]

But in exercising their powers under this rule, Courts ought to see that they do not load the record with parties who are shown to have no interest in the suit[12] and that the trial of the suit is not embarrassed by the simultaneous investigation of totally unconnected controversies.[13] Thus in a suit by A against B for damages on the ground that goods sold by B to A did not correspond to sample, it is not necessary to add the person who sold the same goods to B before the latter sold it to A.[14] In a suit by A against B to compel the registration of a document, third parties cannot be added and permitted to plead that the document ought not to be registered.[15] Similarly a person claiming under a title quite distinct from that under which any of the parties to the suit claim, is not a proper party.[16] So also in a suit between parties each contending that he is the judgment-creditor in respect of a particular decree, the judgment-debtor is not a proper party.[17] Where A sues B for damages for tort, it is not necessary to add all persons injured by the same tort.[18]

Where parties are unnecessarily impleaded at the instance of a person other than the plaintiff, the Court may direct that the costs of the added parties should be paid by the person who moved for their joinder.[19]

15. Partnership suits.—In a suit for dissolution of partnership and accounts it is essential that all the partners should be on the record.[1] Where one of the partners is dead, his representatives are necessary parties.[2] Similarly, the receiver of a deceased partner's estate will be a necessary party.[3]

O. 1, R. 10, Note 15.

But a sub-partner[3-a] or a person who is not in the partnership as a member of the firm but is a member of a superior partnership in which he is on one side and the whole firm as a unit on the other, is not a necessary party to a suit for dissolution of the firm.[4]

In a suit for the recovery of a debt due to the partnership all the partners are necessary parties inasmuch as, under S. 45 of the Indian Contract Act the right to claim performance of the contract of loan rests jointly with all the promisees.[5] The said section also provides that on the death of one of the promisees, the right to claim performance rests with the surviving promisees and the legal representatives of the deceased promisee. The latter will also be necessary parties therefore to a suit for a debt due to the partnership and this is what the High Court of Calcutta holds.[6] The Allahabad,[7] Bombay[7-a] and Madras[8] High Courts have, however, held a contrary view based on the inconvenience and difficulties that might arise in insisting upon the joinder of the legal representatives of a deceased partner. It is submitted with respect that this latter view is not correct. It is unnecessary to consider this question under the present Code, for the newly introduced provisions of O. 30 provide an exception, as it were, to S. 45 of the Contract Act in that they allow one partner alone to sue, provided the suit is in the name of the firm.[8-a] It follows that where such a suit is brought, the legal representatives of a deceased partner are not necessary parties.[8-b]

A dormant partner is not a necessary party in an action on a contract entered into with the firm or with one of its members.[9] Where in a suit by the owner of a firm who is also a member of a joint Hindu family, the other members of the family are proved to be partners in the firm, the Court ought to allow the other members to come on record and have the plaint amended accordingly.[10] The same rule will hold good where a suit is brought by the plaintiff as the sole partner and it is found that there are other partners.[11]

16. Partition suits.—All persons interested in the properties are necessary parties to a suit for partition.[1] The reason is that the share to which a person is entitled can be determined only in the presence of all the persons interested in the properties inasmuch as the partition which is made in favour of the plaintiff against his co-sharers gives him a portion of the property and takes away all rights which the others have in it. But the interest of the person, in order to make him a necessary party, must be of the same degree as that of the plaintiff. Persons having an inferior degree of interest to that of the plaintiff are not necessary parties.[2] Thus in a suit for partition of the melwaram rights in certain properties, the kudiwaramdars are not necessary parties.[3] Similarly in a suit for partition by sons against the father, grandsons are not necessary parties.[4] Similarly, mortgagees of the family properties[5] and creditors of the defendants[6] as also alienees of the family properties[7] are not necessary parties to a suit for partition. They may all be proper parties, however, if their presence is necessary to enable the Court to adjudicate upon and settle all matters in dispute effectually and completely.[8] The High Court of Bombay has, however, held in the undermentioned case that a purchaser or mortgagee of a co-parcener's share in joint property is a necessary party to the suit for partition.[9]

O. 1, R. 10, Notes 16–18

Persons not claiming any kind of interest in the properties are not to be added as parties in a partition suit.[10]

17. Pre-emption suits.—In a suit for pre-emption in respect of a joint purchase by several co-vendees, all of them[1] or in the case of the death of one of them, his legal representatives[2] are necessary parties. A second vendee is also a necessary party.[3] But the vendor[4] or a mortgagee from the vendee[5] is not a necessary party. Where the suit for pre-emption is against the benami vendee, the real purchaser may be added as a proper party, as such addition will not change the character of the suit.[6] Where a purchaser sues for rent accruing due between the date of his purchase and the date of his surrender to the pre-emptor, the latter must be impleaded as a party.[7]

18. Suits for possession by co-owners.—All co-owners are necessary parties to a suit to recover property belonging to them jointly.[1] Thus one member of a joint Hindu family cannot sue for recovery of property belonging to the family without impleading the other members as parties to the suit.[1-a] Where, however, he sues or is sued as a manager of the family, it is not necessary to add the other members as parties.[2] Similarly where a bond

Transfer of Property Act by the decree in the suit.[7] But he may be added as a proper party.[7a] Where, however, the assignee is a purchaser at a Court sale he will be a necessary party.[8] The reason is that S. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to sales in invitum. In an ejectment suit by a landlord against his tenant the Court should not bring on the record the person from whom the plaintiff holds the land nor persons claiming to hold it from a third party nor such third party.[9] Where A sues his lessor B for possession of land and C intervenes claiming it to be his, he can be added as a proper party if he does not claim adversely both to the plaintiff and the defendant.[10] In a suit for ejectment of a sub-tenant's sub-tenant, the sub-tenant is a necessary party.[11] In a suit for possession of attached property under S. 146, Criminal Procedure Code, the government is not a necessary party.[12] Nor is a Hindu reversioner a necessary or proper party to a suit by the adopted son for possession against the widow where the validity of the adoption could not be questioned.[13] Where B is made a co-plaintiff with A in a suit for possession, on the ground that under an agreement between them, B is entitled to share in the property in the event of success in the litigation, and subsequently A compromises the suit with the defendant, B cannot claim to continue the suit, as he has no present subsisting interest in the property.[14]

19. Suits by or against joint promisees.—All co-promisees are necessary parties to a suit to enforce the promise.[1] The same principle will apply where a sole obligee dies leaving several co-heirs. In such a case, one of them alone cannot maintain a suit without impleading the others as parties.[2] Where several persons are jointly and severally liable for a single liability all of them are not necessary parties to a suit against some of them only; but they may be added as proper parties in order to prevent multiplicity of suits.[3]

O. 1, R. 10 Notes 19—20.

20. Suits for rent.—It has been already observed in Note 7 to O. 1, R. 1, that where a right to enforce a liability is jointly vested in several persons, all of them are necessary parties to a suit to enforce such liability.[1] In rent suits only those persons who are liable to pay rent should be impleaded as parties.[2] The general principle governing the joinder of necessary parties does not enable persons who are not likely to be affected by the result, to come in and raise altogether new questions which do not properly arise. Therefore a tenant cannot ordinarily insist on impleading a third party in a rent suit, so as to raise questions of title and thus convert a simple rent suit into a complicated title suit: nor can such party be allowed to come in on his own application.[3] Where, however, the third party claims a share of the rent sued for[4] or where the defendant pleads payment to the third party with the owner's consent[5] or where the third party is alleged to be a transferee from the tenant with the landlord's consent,[6] he may be impleaded as a proper party to the suit. Where, during the pendency of a rent suit, a receiver is appointed in respect of the property of the defendants, he must be impleaded as a necessary party to the suit.[7] It has been held by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court that the heirs of a tenant do not take the tenancy as an entire body, but take as tenants-in-common each being liable jointly and severally for the whole rent to the landlord and that therefore a suit against some of the heirs alone for rent without impleading the others is not bad,[8] though of course they may be added as proper parties.[9]

It may here be observed that apart from the question of the joinder of parties one of several joint lessors cannot sue for recovery of his share of the rent[10] or for enhancement of his share of the rent,[11] unless a special arrangement to the contrary is proved[12] or unless the other co-sharers are alleged to have been paid off their shares[13] or the other sharers do not contest the plaintiff's claim[14] or collude with the defendant.[15] A person who is a necessary party to a suit for rent is also a necessary party to the appeal against the decree in such suit.[16]

21. Suits on torts.—See also O. 1, R. 3 under the heading "Joint tort-feasors". All persons jointly injured need not all be impleaded as parties to a suit on tort.[1]

22. Mortgage suits.—See O. 34, R. 1, infra.

23. Suits on Negotiable Instruments.—A suit on a Negotiable Instrument must be instituted in the name of a person who, on the face of the instrument, is entitled thereto or by a holder deriving title from him.[1] Where the suit is by a benami-holder upon a promissory note, the Court may add the real creditor as plaintiff.[2] In a suit on a lost cheque by the endorsee of the cheque against the endorser for a duplicate of the cheque or for refund of money paid, the drawer of the cheque must be made a party.[3] The mere fact that the drawer and acceptor of a bill are partners does not give rise to the presumption, that they are partners in respect of the drawing of the bill. The fact that the acceptor of the bill is not liable, having been joined as a party after lapse of time does not discharge the drawer from his liability where the suit has been instituted against him in time.[4]

24. Suits for specific performance.—The general rule is that a person who is a stranger to the contract is not a proper party to a suit for specific performance of the said contract.[1] Where, however, the promisor defendant acts in concert with another person in order to defeat the plaintiff's rights under the contract, such person may be added as a proper party to the suit.[2] Thus where A enters into a contract with B for sale of land, and subsequently sells the same land along with his son C to D, C will be a proper party in a suit by B against A for specific performance of the contract.[3] The transferee from the vendor after the contract of sale may also be added as a party.[4] Where A on behalf of himself and his minor brother B entered into an agreement to sell with C, and C sued for specific performance of such agreement, it was held that B was properly impleaded as a party even though a decree could not be given against him, as his presence was necessary to have the question of the binding character of the agreement decided in the suit.[5] Under a single contract to convey land to several persons it is not open to some of the joint contractors only to enforce specific performance thereof.[6]

25. Government.—See also Note 6 to S. 79 ante. Where an Act of State or any other act of the Government is questioned or the proprietary right or right to revenue of the Government is likely to be affected, the Government is a necessary party to the suit.[1]

In some cases, the Government may have such an interest in the matter that the joinder, though not necessary, might be proper.[2] Where the Government has no interest of any kind in the suit, it is neither a necessary nor a proper party.[3] provided such fraudulent purpose has not been carried out.[3-c] See also Note 61 to S. 9 ante.

Other Suits.—In a suit by an alleged adopted son against the widow for declaration of title and possession, the mortgagee from the widow may be added as a proper party.[4] Where subsequent to a suit for declaration of the plaintiff's right to attach a house in execution of a decree, the defendant had entered into an agreement of sale with X and had also undertaken to defend the suit, X can be impleaded as a party on the defendant's failure so to defend the suit.[5] The judgment-debtor is a proper party to a suit by a transferee of a decree for a declaration of the validity of the assignment.[6]

In a suit to set aside a Rent sale the receiver at whose instance the sale is effected is not a necessary party.[7] In a suit by a remote reversioner to set aside a sale by a Hindu widow the nearer reversioners may be impleaded as proper parties.[8] Where one member of joint Hindu family sues for a declaration against other members thereof, the non-joinder of one of such other members is not necessarily fatal to the suit. He may be added under O. 1, R. 10, sub-Cl. 2 if the Court considers his presence necessary.[9] Where the question is whether the plaintiff or defendant is the real purchaser, a third-party claiming adversely to both of them cannot be impleaded in the suit.[10] As to the necessity of impleading all the attaching creditors in a suit for declaration against one of them that the property is not liable to attachment, see the undermentioned case.[11]

28. Addition introducing new cause of action.—The Court will not give leave to add a party where the result would be to introduce a new cause of action with which the plaintiff has nothing to do.[1] Thus, where A, an importer and seller of watches, sues B for an injunction restraining him from importing and selling similar watches, the manufacturer cannot be allowed to be added as a party.[2] Similarly where A, who purchased goods by sample from B, sued B for damages on the ground that the goods purchased were not according to sample and B applies to implead C, his vendor who sold by sample, so that the question between him (B) and C, may also be decided, it was held that such joinder would introduce a new cause of action and should not be allowed.[3] In a suit for a decree in terms of an award to which the defendant consents, a creditor of the defendant who impugns the award as fraudulent should not be added as a party.[4]

29. Addition altering nature of suit.—Parties should not be added so as to convert a suit of one character into a suit of a different character.[1] Thus a simple suit for rent, cannot, by adding parties, be converted into a suit for title.[2] Similarly a suit for plaintiff's share of the estate of a deceased person cannot be converted into an administration suit by addition of all the persons interested in the estate.[3]

30. "Questions involved in the suit."—The expression "questions involved in the suit" does not mean all claims which may possibly be put forward by anybody to the property involved in the suit.[1] It means questions as between the parties to the litigation, i.e., questions with regard to the right set up and the relief claimed on one side and denied or withheld on the other,[2] and not to questions which may arise between co-plaintiffs and co-defendants inter se.[3] The said words would, in the case of a suit for partition, include not only the questions arising out of the plaint, but of the plaint considered along with the statement of defence.[4]

31. "Improper addition of plaintiff or defendant."—It has been observed already in Note 10 above that sub-Rule 2 of this rule is subject to the limitation that the Court has no power to join a person as a party if he could not have been originally impleaded under O. 1, R. 1 or 3. Nor does this sub-Rule override the effect of O. 2, R. 3. Thus a person claiming under a title quite distinct from that under which the parties to the suit claim, is an improper party, as his joinder as a party will result in a misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action.[1]

Where a person whose right to join as a co-plaintiff is denied by the plaintiff on the record,[2] or where such person objects to be added as a plaintiff[3] his joinder as co-plaintiff is improper, though he may be made a defendant.[4] A defendant already on record cannot take such objections as are available to the defendant newly added. Such objections are to be taken by the newly added defendant himself.[5]

32. Parties may be added at any stage of the proceedings.—The power to add a party can be exercised at any stage of the suit.[1] Thus a party could be added before the final decree is actually drawn up[2] or after a suit has been re-instated on an application under O. 9, R. 13 of the Code.[3] The Court has, however, no jurisdiction to add a party in the following cases:—

(1) Where a final decree has been passed and drawn up in the suit, and the matter, so far as regards that Court, becomes conclusive.[4]

(2) Where an appeal has been filed against the preliminary decree passed by the Court, and the appellate Court thus becomes seized of the matter.[5]

(3) Where the suit has been remanded to the Court under O. 41, R. 25 of the Code.[6]

(4) Where the suit has been terminated by the parties by a lawful compromise.[7]

There is a conflict of view as to whether, after a preliminary decree and before a final decree, a Court has power to act under this rule and add a party and thus re-open the proceedings. The High Court of Madras,[8] Bombay,[9] Calcutta[10] and Allahabad[11] hold that it has. So also does the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind.[12] The Nagpur[13] and the Oudh[14] Judicial Commissioners' Courts, on the other hand, hold that it has no such power. The latter view seems to proceed upon the view that such addition involves the setting aside of the preliminary decree, and that this cannot be done by the Court. Really, however, the proceedings are re-opened only so far as the added party is concerned and this is not affected by O. 20, R. 3. It is therefore submitted that the former view is the correct one.

When the suit is re-opened in appeal the appellate Court has the same powers of adding a party as the first Court till a final decree is passed by it.[15] The same principle will apply to the Court of second appeal.[16]

Where the suit is a representative one such as a suit contemplated by O. 1, R. 8 or by S. 14 of the Religious Endowments Act, the persons represented by the actual party, are really parties to the suit and their being brought on the record after the decree in the place of the actual party does not affect the rule that a Court cannot implead a new party after decree.[17]

33. Striking out name of party improperly joined.—The impropriety in the joinder of a party lies in the fact that a party is introduced who has no connection with the reliefs claimed in the plaint.[1] In the case of an improper joinder of plaintiffs the Court can ask them to elect one among themselves to proceed with the suit and to amend the plaint by striking off the others.[2] In the case of improper joinder of defendants the proper course is to strike out the names of such defendants and not to dismiss the suit as against them.[3]

Where a defendant is brought on the record, the Court has no power to strike out his name merely because notice could not be served on him owing to the non-discovery of his whereabouts[4] or because he does not resist the plaintiff's claim.[5] Where the plaintiff states that he has no claim against some of the defendants the proper course is to strike out the names of such defendants and not to dismiss the suit as against them.[6]

O. 1, R. 10, Note 33.

When a party's name is struck out, the suit comes to an end so far as he is concerned.[7] All the evidence produced by him should be removed from the record.[8] If, on the removal of his name the Court finds that it has no jurisdiction to try the case, the plaint should be returned to be presented to the proper Court.[9]

A Court of appeal has a similar power of striking out parties, to that of the first Court.[10] It has also power to direct the first Court to do so.[11] It is not competent for the lower Court, however, to strike out the name of a party added by the appellate Court.[12] Where one judge has ordered a party to be added leaving the issue of misjoinder to be decided later, the successor is competent to strike out the name of the party improperly joined.[13] Where the appellate Court finds that a defendant has been improperly added by the lower Court, it should strike out his name and dismiss the suit against him with costs both in the lower Court and before itself and not merely to dismiss the appeal preferred by such defendant.[13-a]

Where a suit is dismissed against a defendant on the ground that he has been improperly joined, it will amount to a striking off his name under this rule even though the striking out was not formally done, and he ceases to be a party to the suit.[14] But where the plaintiff gives up a defendant properly made a party, but his name is not formally struck out, he, nevertheless, continues to be a party to the suit.[15]

A party who ought not to have been impleaded and who is not affected by the decree passed, is not competent to figure as an appellant and where he so figures, his name should be struck out.[16]

Where an order impleading a party, is appealed from and the appeal is dismissed, the impropriety of the addition cannot again be questioned at the stage of the appeal from the decree itself.[17]

34. Transposition of parties.—The power to add or strike out parties includes, as has been seen in Note 9 above, the power to transpose them as well and to order amendments consequent upon such transposition.[1] This power should be exercised wherever the ends of substantial justice require it and a transfer of parties from one side to the other should always be granted where the refusal to do so would prejudicially affect the applicant by driving him to another suit.[2] Thus in a suit for partnership accounts where the plaintiff wishes to withdraw the suit, but defendants wish to continue the suit, the plaintiff should be transferred as defendant and the defendant as plaintiff and the suit continued.[3] Transpositions of parties are frequent in partnership suits,[4] partition suits[5] and in suits for administration.[6]

Under O. 1, R. 10, sub-Rule 2 and S. 107 of the Code, the appellate Court has the power to transpose a respondent as an appellant in order to further the ends of justice.[7]

It is no valid objection to an application for transposing a party that the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court would be affected by such transfer; if it is exceeded, the Court can afterwards return the plaint to be presented to the proper Court.[8]

35. Transposing of defendant as plaintiff.—The transposition of a defendant as a co-plaintiff should always be allowed "where it is necessary for a complete adjudication upon the questions involved in the suit and to avoid multiplicity of proceedings".[1] A sues B the mortgagor, and C, the subsequent mortgagee for recovery of the amount due on his mortgage. A preliminary decree is passed, and, thereafter, C pays off the amount due thereunder before the passing of the final decree and applies to be transposed as a plaintiff. The Court has power to so transpose him and pass a final decree for foreclosure in his favour.[1-a] Similarly where one of two co-trustees sues a third person for recovery of the trust property and impleads the other trustee as a defendant and pending suit the plaintiff dies, the other trustee defendant can be transposed as a plaintiff and the suit proceeded with.[2] So also where, A, alleging that he was appointed trustee by C, a deceased person, sues B for moneys due by B to C, and makes C's widow D also a defendant to the suit and it is found that A was not the trustee for that amount it being C's absolute property, the proper course is to transpose D as a plaintiff and proceed with the suit.[2-a]

But a transposition of a defendant as a plaintiff cannot be allowed where it deprives another defendant of a valuable right acquired by virtue of the statute of limitations. Thus, where A sues B and C on a promissory note executed by B to C, on the ground that C was really a benamidar for A, and finding that such a suit is not maintainable by A under the Negotiable Instruments Act, C applies to be transposed as a plaintiff, the application should not be allowed if, at the time of doing so an independent suit by C against B would be barred by limitation. The reason is that B will lose thereby a valuable statutory right acquired by lapse of time.[3] Similarly a transposition of a defendant as a plaintiff should not be granted if it results in changing the character of the suit.[4] Nor can a transposition be made where it would deprive the plaintiff already on record of his power to sue and ask for a determination of the claim advanced by him. Thus where A claims to have the sole right to a certain sum of money due from a defendant B and makes a third person C, who claims as against himself (A), a party to the suit, C cannot be transposed as a plaintiff in the place of A, as, to do so, would be to deprive A of his right to have his claim determined.[5]

36. Transposing of plaintiff as defendant.—Under O. 1, R. 10, one of the plaintiffs can be transposed as a defendant, if his original joinder was improper.[1] The Court has also, apart from O. 1, R. 10, inherent power to transpose one of the plaintiffs as a defendant.[2] If the transposition is made at the instance of a co-plaintiff, the Court can make such co-plaintiff give security for the costs of the original defendants incurred up to the date of transposition.[2-a] But as regards future costs of the original defendants, the Courts cannot, merely because of the transposition of one of the plaintiffs as a defendant, order such co-plaintiff to furnish security for their future costs.[2-b] But it would seem, that if apart from the transposition, there are special circumstances, such as the plaintiff suing in the capacity of a "puppet" for another, the Courts may order security for future costs as well.[3]

37. Misdescription of parties.—Where the person who intends to sue or who is intended to be sued is clear, but is described wrongly, it is a case of misdescription of parties which can be corrected by the Court at any time.[1] Similarly where relief is originally claimed by or against a party (such as an idol, a minor, or a corporation) who has to be represented by some person, the proper representation of that party is a question of the description of the party, and not one of addition of new parties.[1-a] But where one person sues or is sued, and another person is sought to be substituted in his place, the case is not one of misdescription of parties, and the amendment can be allowed only if there is no question of limitation.[1-b]

Illustrations.

1. A sues "the agent, East India Railway Co.", relief being asked for against the Company and not against the agent personally. The title is sought to be amended into "East India Railway Co.", by striking out the word "agent". Here the plaintiff's claim as originally made was clearly against the Company, though the title of the suit was worded as if the suit was against the agent also. The case is, therefore, one of misdescription and can be corrected by the Court at any time.[1-c] But where the agent is sued personally, the amendment of the title as above mentioned will really amount to a substitution of a new party which will not be allowed after the period of limitation.[2]

2 A suit is wrongly filed in the name of the Chairman, District Board, Dacca, instead of the District Board, Dacca. The case is one of misdescription and can be corrected by striking off the word "Chairman".[3] Similarly where A sues the Municipal Committee of Gorakhpur through its Secretary instead of through its President as he ought to have done, and the relief claimed is against the Committee, the misdescription can be corrected at any time.[4]

3. A brought a suit against "Shivlal Ramprasad, a firm doing business as merchants at Ahmadabad". It was found subsequently that Shivlal Ramprasad was a joint Hindu family and that the provisions of O. 30, would not apply. The title of the plaint was sought to be amended by substituting the names of the members of the family for the firm's name "Shivlal Ramprasad". It was held that the amendment was only a correction of misdescription and did not amount to an addition of any new parties.[5]

4. A suit was instituted for damages by "H. Hogarth & Sons", it being alleged that they were the owners of the vessel "Baron Jedburgh". The real name of the plaintiff was, however, "Hogarth Shipping Co., Ltd.", and was not described as such owing to a bona fide mistake. Held, that the description could be corrected at any stage.[6]

The principle of the rule applies to miscellaneous applications also. Thus where an application was made by "The Official Assignee of Bombay" instead of by the "Official Assignee of Bombay as an attorney of the Official Assignee of Madras" it was held that the misdescription could be corrected by the Court.[7]

Where a party is wrongly described and the Court orders amendment giving a correct description, and inspite of it the amendment is not carried out, the Court can strike out the name of such party.[8]

38. Consent of added party, sub-Rule 3.—No person can be added as a plaintiff without his consent expressly given.[1] But a person can be made a defendant against the plaintiff's consent[2] even though he may thereby be in a position to counter-claim against the plaintiff.[3]

Persons who are made parties to a suit in the appellate stage cannot be made liable for costs, simply because they encouraged the plaintiff to bring the suit.[4]

39. Amendment of Plaint, sub-Rule 4.—The amendment referred to in this sub-Rule is such amendment as is necessitated by the addition of a defendant and not such an amendment as would add to or alter the nature of the suit as originally brought.[1] A case of misdescription is also one for amendment of the plaint.[2] Where the amendment as per the order of the Court is not made, the proper course is to reject the plaint.[3] But if the parties proceed with the trial without the amendment, if they are not prejudiced, the trial is not bad.[4] In such a case, the petition may be treated as a part of the plaint.

40. Suit by or against a dead person.—A suit instituted in the name of a sole plaintiff[1] or against a sole defendant[2] who is dead at the time of the institution of the suit is a nullity and the plaint cannot be amended by bringing his legal representatives on the record. Where, however, there are several plaintiffs or several defendants and one of them dies, the suit cannot be said to be void ab initio.[3] The proper procedure in such a case is to strike out the dead person's name and proceed with the suit.[4] If the deceased person was a necessary party, the plaint can be amended by adding his legal representatives as parties.[5]

An appeal against a person who was dead at the date of the presentation of the appeal is incompetent, but as the Court is only acting in a proceeding in a suit, it has full power to allow amendment of the appeal by adding the legal representatives of the deceased respondent as parties.[6]

41. Limitation Act, S. 22.—S. 22 of Limitation Act (XV of 1877, now Act IX of 1908) provides that where a new plaintiff or defendant is added, the suit shall, as regards him, be deemed to have been instituted when he was so made a party.[1] If on the date of his addition, the suit is barred against him, it will have to be dismissed as against him.[1-a] But does the addition of a party after the period of limitation, affect the suit against other defendants who are already on the record? The answer to this depends upon the question whether the added party is a necessary party or is only a proper party or whether he was already constructively a party to the suit though not actually so. If he was a necessary party, i.e., if the suit will not be properly constituted one, unless he is made a party, his addition after the period of limitation will entail the dismissal of the whole suit, inasmuch as the suit becomes a properly constituted one, only when he is made a party, and inasmuch, as at that time, the suit is barred against all.[2] Where the party added is only a proper party but not a necessary one, the suit as against the other defendants will not be barred.[3] Where the added party is already constructively a party to the suit, as in the case of representative suits, it is really not a case of adding or substituting new parties, and S. 22 does not apply to such a case.[4] O. 1, R. 10, Note 41.

affect the suit by A, who in his own right as manager of the family was entitled to institute the suit.[9] The same result may also be arrived at on the principle that the manager represents the other members, that the latter are constructively parties to the suit and that therefore their subsequent addition is not an addition of any new parties within S. 22 of the Limitation Act.[10]

5. A, as executrix of B's will files a suit for recovery of possession of lands belonging to the deceased B. C and D, the beneficiaries under the will are substituted for A after the period of limitation. The suit is not barred by S. 22 of the Limitation Act. The reason is that an executor, trustee or administrator represents the persons beneficially interested and the addition of C and D in the above case is not the addition of any new party.[11]

The mere fact that the Court, of its own motion orders the name of any person to be added as a party does not render the provisions of S. 22 of the Limitation Act inapplicable.[12]

Section 22 does not apply to a case of transposition of parties, as the Explanation to that section itself shows:[13]

> Under sub-Clause 5 of this rule, a person will be deemed to have been made a party, and proceedings begin against him, only on the service of summons on him.[14]

Applying this sub-Clause, some cases[15] have held that the suit as against such a person will be barred unless the service is within the period of limitation. But as the sub-Clause is expressly made subject to S. 22 of the Indian Limitation Act the suit as against a newly added defendant must be deemed to have been instituted when he is made a party so far as regards the question of limitation.[16] A person is made a party on the date of the order of the Court making him a party and not on the date of the application to make him a party.[17] Where, however, the lower Court has refused the application and the appellate Court has ordered the addition of the party, the date of the application has been held to be the date of addition.[18] O. 1, R. 10, Notes 41—42.

A party once discharged and subsequently re-instated again is a party only from the date of reinstatement.[19]

42. Appeal.—An order under O. 1, R. 10 is not an appealable order and no appeal lies therefrom.[1-a] Thus an order adding[1] or refusing to add a party[2] or an order striking out the name of a party as having been improperly or unnecessarily joined[3] is not appealable. But if in substance the order amounts to a "decree" within the meaning of S. 2 (2) it will be appealable as a decree. Thus where the defendant's name is struck out on the ground that the plaintiff has no cause of action against him, and the suit is dismissed as against him, the order, in substance, determines the rights of the plaintiff to bring the suit against the defendant and amounts to a decree and, is, therefore appealable as such.[4] Similarly, in a suit under S. 92 of the Code an order refusing to join persons as parties, finally adjudicates or concludes the matter as against those persons inasmuch as such suit operates in rem. It is, therefore, appealable as a decree.[5] Similarly, in a partition suit, where the name of one of the defendants is struck out leaving undecided the defendant's claim to a share in the partition, the order amounts to a decree and is appealable.[6]

But the mere fact that the order under this rule is drafted in the form of a decree, will not make it really a decree, so as to confer a right of appeal.[7]

See also Notes 6 and 7 to S. 2, sub-S. 2.

43. Revision.—An order passed in the exercise of the Court's discretion under this Rule is not ordinarily revisable under S. 115 of the Code[1] even if it is erroneous.[2] But where the order amounts to a failure to exercise jurisdiction, as where the Court considers it has no power to act under this rule,[3] or where it fails to consider whether the application should be granted or not[4] a revision will lie. Similarly where the order is such that the Court will be deemed to have acted illegally or with material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction as where a necessary party is improperly refused to be added[5] or where a party is improperly added causing a misjoinder of parties[6] or resulting in a continuation of litigation[7] or where the application for joinder is refused on the ground that the applicant has no locus standi, or that the plaintiff objects to such joinder[8] or where the order is manifestly unjust,[9] a revision will lie under S. 115.

The High Court can also interfere with orders passed under this rule in the exercise of its powers of superintendence under S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, where they amount to a denial of fair trial[10] or where irreparable injury or manifest injustice is likely to result thereby.[11]

As to whether an order under this rule is a "case" within the meaning of S. 115 of the Code, see the Notes to that section and the undermentioned cases.[12]

Conduct of suit.

[1877, S. 32, R. S. C., O. 16, R. 39.]

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.

1. Scope of the Rule.—The word "person" means a party to the suit, and the Court has no power to give the conduct of the suit to a stranger.[1]

Under the English Law, the Court has as much power to give the conduct of the defence to one of the defendants as the conduct of the suit to one of the plaintiffs.[2] The substitution of the word "person" for the word "plaintiff" in S. 32 of the last Code, would seem to make it clear that the law is the same under the present rule.

Under this rule, read with O. 1, R. 10, the Court has power to transpose a defendant as plaintiff and give him the conduct of the suit.[3]

R. 12. [S. 35.] (1) Where there are more plaintiffs than one, any one or more of them may be authorized by any other of them to appear, plead or act for such other in any proceeding; and in like manner, where there are more defendants than one, any one or more of them may be authorized by any other of them to appear, plead or act for such other in any proceeding. O. 1, R. 12, Note 1.

R. 13. [S. 34.] All objections on the ground of non-joinder or misjoinder of parties shall be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and, in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement, unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen, and any such objection not so taken shall be deemed to have been waived.

Objections as to non joinder or misjoinder.

[1877—34. See O. 1, R. 9, O. 2, R. 7, and S. 99.]

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.
2. Objection not taken at the earliest opportunity cannot be taken later on.
3. "Unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen."

1. Scope of the Rule.—The Rule provides that all objections on the ground of misjoinder or non-joinder not taken at the earliest opportunity shall be deemed to have been waived. It is based on the principle that a technical objection, which, if taken at an earliest stage of the proceedings, might have been cured, and which has not been so taken, should not be allowed to be raised at a later stage, so as to defeat the rights of the parties.[1]

The rule applies to non-joinder or misjoinder of parties to appeals, as well as to suits.[2] It also applies to references to arbitration.[2-4] But it does not apply to any objection on the ground of want of cause of action or right of suit in the plaintiff, which is disclosed only after evidence is taken.[3] The reason is that such an objection is not one on the ground of misjoinder or non-joinder.

The rule, although it limits the right of a defendant to object, does not in any way affect the Courts' power under O. 1, R. 10 to add or strike out parties; nor does it limit the right of the plaintiff to add parties.[4]

2. Objection not taken at the earliest opportunity cannot be taken later on.—It follows from what has been stated in Note 1 that objections as to misjoinder and non-joinder of parties not raised in the lower Court should not be allowed to be raised for the first time in the appellate Court.[1a] But where the objection is taken at the proper time, the Court is bound to adjudicate upon it.[2] Where an objection is taken at the earliest opportunity but is not decided upon and subsequently, at the conclusion of the trial, the objection is found to be a valid one, effect should be given to it.[3] Where, however, the objection raised in the lower Court is not pressed, it cannot be allowed to be re-opened in the appellate Court.[4] O. 1, R. 13, Note 2.

Where the defendant opposes the plaintiffs' application for joinder of certain parties and the Court rejects the application, the defendant cannot subsequently raise the plea of non-joinder with respect to such parties.[5] Where a suit was first heard ex parte and, on the defendant's application, the suit was ordered to be re-heard, and he was allowed to put in a plea of non-joinder it was held that the objection was taken in proper time.[6]

The present rule applies to the non-joinder of necessary as well as proper parties.[7] But in an old Allahabad case it was held to be not applicable to mortgage suits in which the necessary parties under S. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act had not been joined.[8] This can only be of academic interest now, as the joinder of parties is no longer a matter of substantive law as it was before the present Code, but only of procedure.

Under S. 22 of the Limitation Act, where additional parties are joined in a suit, the suit, as regards them should be deemed to be instituted when they were so added. If such parties are necessary plaintiffs and at the time of their joinder the suit is barred as regards them, the entire suit should be held to be barred.[9] But the rule in O. 1, R. 13 applies even in such cases. Hence a defendant who has not raised the objection as to the non-joinder at the earliest opportunity, cannot take advantage of the bar of limitation when the parties are added after the expiry of limitation.[10]

An objection on the ground of non-joinder cannot be taken by a defendant who is found to have no interest in the subject-matter of the suit.[11]

3. "Unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen."—These words did not occur in the old section. But even under the old section it was held that where the ground of objection came into existence after the settlement of issues, there was no bar to raising the objection after such settlement. Thus, where a co-parcener who was a necessary party to a suit for partition, was born after the settlement of issues and the plaintiff did not make him a party, the defendant was held entitled to object though issues had already been settled.[1]

It has been held by the High Court of Madras that an objection as to non-joinder of parties cannot be allowed to be raised after settlement of issues merely by reason of the fact that the ground of objection was not known to the defendant at or before the settlement of issues.[2] The High Court of Allahabad has, on the other hand, held that a defendant cannot be deemed to have waived the objection under this rule when he had no opportunity of taking the objection or when he was ignorant of the facts on which the objection depended.[3]

O. 2, R. 1. Notes 1—3.

1. Scope of the Order.—The provisions of this order dealing with the frame of suits should be so construed as not to conflict with the provisions contained in O. 1, which deal with the joinder of parties to suits, on the well-known principle that a statute should be construed as a whole.[1]

2. Scope of the Rule.—The object of this Rule is, that all matters in dispute between the parties and relating to the same transaction should as far as possible be disposed of in the same suit.[1] The penalty for non-compliance with the rule is provided partly by S. 11, Explanation 4, and partly by O. 2, R. 2.[2]

Section 11, Explanation IV provides that any matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of attack or of defence in a former suit will be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit and will not be allowed to be re-opened in a subsequent suit between the same parties although it was not actually adjudicated upon in the former suit. O. 2, R. 2, provides that every suit should include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the same cause of action, and that if he omits to include any portion of such claim he shall not be entitled to sue again in respect of it.

This rule has reference mainly, if not exclusively, to correct joinder of causes of action, adequate inclusion of reliefs claimed and so forth, rather than joinder of parties.[3]

3. Subjects in dispute.—The expression "subjects in dispute" has nowhere been defined in the Code and the decisions bearing on the question are not always reconcilable. But an examination of these decisions leads on the whole to the view, that the phrase "Subjects in dispute" refers to the right claimed by one party against the other with reference to a particular legal relation or transaction between the parties. In other words as put in 26 Mad. 760 at page 767 the phrase "means the cause of action or the subject-matter of litigation, that is, the right which one party claims as against the other, and demands the judgment of the Court upon." Applying this construction, the present rule requires the plaintiff to bring forward his whole case as to the particular legal relation or transaction on which his suit is based but does not require him to raise in the same suit matters pertaining to a different legal relation or transaction, although such matters may have a bearing on the right claimed by the plaintiff.

Thus where A sues B to recover certain property on the ground that he had acquired a title to the property by adverse possession and he fails to prove his claim, he cannot sue again to recover the same property on the ground of his general title.[1] The reason is that where a plaintiff sues as owner he should bring before the Court in the same suit all the grounds of attack available to him with reference to his claim for ownership.[2]

But suppose X sues Y to recover certain lands on the ground that Y held them as lessee under X and that the lease had expired. X fails to prove the lease and sues again for the recovery of the same lands on the strength of his general title. The second suit is not barred because the legal relationship between the parties in the second suit is different from that in the first.[3] Similarly, a person suing to redeem a specific mortgage of a certain property, is not debarred, upon his failure to prove the mortgage from suing to redeem another specific mortgage on the same property, because the transactions between the parties on which the suits are based, are different.[4]

The following are some more examples of cases bearing on this branch of the subject:—

(1) As a general rule, a suit for partition should embrace the whole partible property belonging to the parties.[5] (But this rule is subject to various exceptions.[6])

(2) As a general rule, a partner cannot sue merely for his share of the profits of the firm, but must sue for taking the whole accounts of the firm.[7] O. 2, R. 1 Note 3,

For exceptions to the general rule, see the case noted below.[8]

(3) Every suit for pre-emption must include the whole of the property subject to the plaintiff's right of pre-emption.[9]

(4) In a suit for declaration of the right to maintenance, the plaint must be so framed as to enable ascertainment of the actual extent of right, i.e., of the amount of maintenance.[10]

(5) A suit to enforce, or to redeem, a mortgage partially, is, as a rule, not maintainable.[11-12]

(6) Although in a suit on the mortgage, full accounts should be taken between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, the mortgagor is not entitled to claim an account, of an entirely independent transaction.[13] Where in proceedings under S. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the property is placed in the possession of a receiver, and a civil suit is brought for the determination of the rights of the rival claimants, the right of the successful claimant to obtain possession from the receiver is not a "subject in dispute" in the suit, and hence, the suit need not include a prayer for possession.[14]

O. 2. R. 1, Note 4.

4. "As far as practicable."—If the plaintiff would be embarrassed in his suit, as for instance, where the evidence in support of one ground of his claim is destructive of the other ground, he is not bound to bring into the same suit, both the grounds of his claim.[1]

O. 2, R. 2.

R. 2. [S. 43.] (1) Every suit shall include the whole of the claim[4] which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action[7]; but a plaintiff may relinquish[12] any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court.

Suit to include the whole claim.

(2) Where a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes, any portion of his claim, [10] he shall not afterwards sue [27] in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished.

Relinquishment of part of claim.

(3) A person entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action may sue for all[13] or any of such reliefs; but if he omits, except with the leave of the Court,[20] to sue for all such reliefs,[14] he shall not afterwards sue [27] for any relief so omitted.

Omission to sue for one of several reliefs.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this rule an obligation and a collateral security[8] for its performance and successive claims arising under the same obligation[9] shall be deemed respectively to constitute but one cause of action.

Illustration.

A lets a house to B at a yearly rent of Rs. 1,200. The rent for the whole of the years 1905, 1906 and 1907 is due and unpaid. A sues B in 1908 only for the rent due for 1906. A shall not afterwards sue B for the rent due for 1905 or 1907.

1. Legislative changes.—

The present rule differs from the corresponding section of the Code of 1882, viz., S. 43 in the following respects:—

(1) The word "relief" in paragraph 3 has been substituted for the word "remedy" in the old section.

(2) The words "obtained before the first hearing" which occurred in the old section have been omitted.

(3) The expression "successive claims arising under the same obligation" have been added into the explanation.

(4) The illustration has been redrafted so as to cover a case of rent due for a period subsequent to that for which the suit was instituted.

2. Scope and object of Rule.—O. 2, R. 2 is based on the principle that the defendant should not be twice vexed for one and the same cause.[1] The rule is directed against two evils, the splitting of claims and the splitting of remedies.[2] It provides that if a plaintiff omits any portion of the claim which he is entitled to make or any of the remedies which he is entitled to claim in respect of the cause of action for his suit, he shall not thereafter sue for the portion of the claim or for the remedy so omitted.[2-a] It follows from this, that the rule does not preclude a second suit based on a distinct and separate cause of action (See Note 23 below).

The rule has reference to the subject-matter of the claim and not to the persons against whom it may be made.[3] Hence an objection on the ground of non-joinder of parties is not within the rule. (See note 21 below.) It is not open to parties by agreement between themselves to over-ride the rule laid down by the Legislature, as regards the splitting of causes of action.[4] The rule being penal in its nature should be construed strictly.[5] O. 2, R. 2 Notes 2—5.

3. Distinction between this rule and Explanation IV to S. 11.—See Note 2 to S. 11 ante.

4. Suit to include the whole of the claim in respect of the cause of action.—Sub-Rule 1 provides that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action, on which the suit is based. But under the sub-Rule 3 where the plaintiff is entitled to several reliefs, he may sue for one or more of such reliefs, and reserve his right, with the leave of the Court, to sue later on for the other reliefs. A is entitled to recover from B Rs. 15,505 personally, as well as from out of B's properties on which the amount is charged. A sues for Rs. 4,000 only out of the claim for Rs. 15,505, and subsequently sues for the balance. The subsequent suit is barred inasmuch as the whole claim namely for the recovery for Rs. 15,505 cannot be split up.[1] Suppose now that A sues for the recovery of the whole of Rs. 15,505 personally from B, and later on brings a fresh suit for sale of the properties charged. This he can do, inasmuch as, in this case, there is no splitting of claim, but only of remedies, which a mortgagee is entitled to do.

5. Plaintiff must have been aware of the claim.—In order that the bar contained in O. 2, R. 2, may apply, the plaintiff must have been aware, at the time of his first suit, of his right to the portion omitted by him or of the facts which would have entitled him to sue for it.[1] If he was so aware of his right, the fact that omission to include any portion of his claim in his former suit was accidental or due to mere oversight will not exempt him from the bar.[2]

O. 2, R. 2, Notes 6—7.

6. Court must have jurisdiction to try the claim.—The bar of O. 2, R. 2 does not apply unless the Court which tried the former suit had jurisdiction to try the claim omitted by the Plaintiff.[1] Thus, where the former suit was in a Revenue Court, and the later suit was in a Civil Court in respect of a claim not triable by the Revenue Court, the later suit is not barred under this rule.[2] Similarly, where the addition of the claim would offend the provisions of O. 2, R. 4 or 5, it may be omitted, and subsequently sued on.[3] So also, where the sanction of the Government[4] or a certificate under the Pension's Act[5] was a necessary condition to the entertainment of the suit and such condition was wanting in the former case, a subsequent suit is not barred.

But the fact that the addition of a relief would have deprived the Court of jurisdiction to try the suit as distinguished from the particular claim omitted, does not affect the applicability of the rule.[6]

7. "Same cause of action."—For a full discussion as to the meaning of the expression "Cause of action", see S. 20 ante, Notes 14 to 31.[1]

The "Cause of action" in this rule means the cause of action for which the suit was brought.[1-a] A rough test although not a conclusive one, as to whether the cause of action in a subsequent suit is the same as that in the former suit, is to see whether the same evidence will sustain both suits[1-b] and regard should be had to the allegations in the two suits and not the facts found by the Court in the former suit.[2] The question is, however, one of substance rather than of form[3] and the causes in the two suits may be the same though the facts alleged may not be exactly identical in the two cases.[4] It is not open to the plaintiff to split up the parts really constituting the same cause of action and file different suits in respect of them.[5] O. 2, R. 2, Notes 7—9.

8. Obligation and Collateral Security.—Under the explanation to O. 2, R. 2, an obligation and a collateral security for its performance constitute but one cause of action.[1] Except for the explanation the two would constitute distinct causes of action[2] as they are under the English Law.[3]

9. Successive claims arising under the same obligation.—Under the explanation to the rule, successive claims arising under the same obligation constitute a single cause of action. Thus in the case of suits on instalment bonds the plaintiff should claim the amount of all the instalments in arrears at the same time. Otherwise he will be barred from suing for the instalments omitted to be so claimed.[1] So also where rent for several successive years is in arrears, but the plaintiff sues only for the rent of some years, and omits to sue for the rents due and in arrears for the years previous to or subsequent to the year of his suit, he cannot subsequently sue for such omitted rents.[2] The same rule holds good in the case of suits for royalty,[3] profits,[4] annuity,[5] etc.

But where a lessee undertakes to pay a portion of the rent reserved, to the lessor's superior landlord, and fails to do so with the result that the lessor has to pay the superior landlord, the lessor may sue separately for that portion of the rent treating it as damages for breach of covenant by the lessee.[6] The reason is that in such a case the causes of action for the two suits are different. For other instances where the lessor can bring several suits see the following cases.[7]

But though the rule bars a fresh suit in respect of one of several successive claims arising under the same obligation, not included in the former suit, it does not prevent the plaintiff from taking any other remedy which he may have for its recovery. Thus, where rent was due for the years 1905, 1906 and 1907 and the former suit was for the rent of 1905 only, the plaintiff cannot sue for the rents of the years 1906 and 1907 but can distrain for the rent due for those years, under the rent laws.[8]

10. Omission to sue in respect of a portion of a claim.—The penalty for the omission to sue for the whole claim is that the plaintiff shall not afterwards sue for the portion so omitted.[1] The plaintiff cannot avoid the bar by expressly stating in his plaint in the previous suit that he reserves his right to sue for the omitted portion of the claim.[2] Nor can he avoid it by obtaining the leave of the Court to sue in respect of the portion of the claim omitted, inasmuch as the only leave that can be granted by the Court, is to sue for one of several reliefs under sub-Rule 3 of section.[3]

The rule refers to the cases where a suit has been filed and the plaintiff has omitted therein to sue for a portion of the claim.[4] It has no application where no suit is filed at all as where the plaint has been returned for presentation to the proper Court, or where the suit is filed and is withdrawn under O. 23, R. 1.[5] O. 2, R. 2, Note 10.

As to the meaning of the words "he shall not afterwards sue" see Note 27 below.

Suits for breaches of contract.—Where the plaintiff in a suit for damages for breach of contract omits to claim a portion of the damages due to him, he cannot subsequently sue for such portion[6] although the omitted portion may relate to a different stipulation in the contract.[7] But where the covenants although contained in the same contract create distinct obligations, the breach of each of them will give rise to a distinct cause of action.[8] A person enters into a contract of service with another for, say a year, but before the expiry of the year, wrongfully dismisses the servant. In such a case the servant's suit for damages for breach of contract should include the payment due to him for the whole year. It is not open to him to split his claim into twelve monthly instalments and sue for each of them separately.[9] Similarly where the defendant commits breach of a contract of sale of goods by refusing to accept a portion of the goods contracted to be purchased by him, and also by refusing to pay for the goods accepted, there is only one cause of action. The plaintiff cannot split it up and sue separately for the price of the goods accepted by the defendant, and for damages for the non-acceptance of the other goods.[10]

A contrary view, however, was taken by Garth, C. J., in the undermentioned case.[10-a] According to the learned Chief Justice a claim for the price of goods sold is essentially a claim for debt and is therefore a cause of action of a different nature from a claim for compensation for not accepting goods which is essentially a claim for damages. But Wilson, J., who sat with him in that case held that there was only one cause of action in such circumstances and his view was approved of in the case cited in foot-note (10) above.

Prima facie each separate order and delivery of goods constitute a separate cause of action.[11] But if all the goods were to be delivered under a single contract then it would be a case of successive claims arising under the same obligation within the Explanation to O. 2, R. 2 and there would be only one cause of action.[12] But where the parties expressly provide in the indent that each monthly shipment should be treated as a separate contract, there would be a separate cause of action in respect of each monthly shipment.[13]

Suits relating to different properties.—Where the facts complained of are the same, there is only one cause of action though the reliefs sought may relate to different properties or different portions of a property.[14]

This is so even though the plaintiff[15] or the defendant[16] may claim the properties under different titles. Thus a suit by a reversioner on the death of a Hindu Widow, to recover properties improperly alienated by her must include all the items alienated by the widow.[17] Similarly a suit by a co-parcener attacking the mortgage of certain co-parcenary properties is a bar to a similar suit in respect of another property included in the same mortgage.[18]

Suit for Rent.—A suit for rent must include the whole amount due to the plaintiff as rent.[19] Thus, though there may be separate muchilikas for each fasli, and the rent for a particular fasli, is thus payable under the particular muchilika, yet, non-payment of rent by the tenant at a particular time, is but one cause of action as far as the landlord is concerned.[19-a]

Suit for Damages for Tort.—A claim to damages arising out of assault cannot be split up into two suits, one for actual pecuniary loss and another for general damages as for injury to feelings.[20]

Suit for demurrage.—A plaintiff in a suit for demurrage, who omits to claim a portion of the relief, cannot subsequently sue in respect of it.[21]

Suit for accounts.—Where the plaintiff in a suit for accounts omits some items, he cannot sue again in respect of the items so omitted.[22] In the undermentioned case[23] accounts were stated between the parties, and the sum so found due, was made payable in instalments, under a promissory note, executed in respect of such sum. The promissory note being insufficiently stamped, was inadmissable in evidence, and hence the payee sued on the original cause of action. But in so suing, he sued only for such of the instalments as were due on the date of the suit, and obtained a decree. He subsequently sued for the remaining instalments. This subsequent suit was held by Spankie, J., to be barred by S. 43 (O. 2, R. 2), while Oldfield, J., held it was not so barred.

Several transactions may give rise to one cause of action, if they form one continuous course of dealing or form parts of one transaction. Thus even where there are different contracts, yet if they form part of one transaction a breach of all of such contracts is only one cause of action.[24] This is because the expression "cause of action" might include claims upon several contracts provided, they form part of a continuous course of dealing. And, rent due to a landlord under different muchilikas for different faslis, would be but one cause of action for arrears of rent due, as far as the landlord is concerned.[24-a] When a tradesman has a bill against a party for any amount in which the items are so connected together that it appears that the dealing is not intended to terminate with one contract, but to be continuous, so that one item if not paid shall be united with another and form one continuous demand, the whole together forms but one cause of action and cannot be divided.[25]

Suits on mortgages.—A mortgagor suing for redemption and failing to claim recovery of a portion of the property cannot sue again for it.[26] A

puisne mortgagee who pays off a prior mortgage, must include in the suit on his mortgage any further claim he may have by reason of such payment.[27] As to the question whether a person holding successive mortgages on the same property, is bound under this rule to sue in respect of all the mortgages, see Note 40 to S. 11 ante. A mortgagee holding a separate money bond against the mortgagor, is not bound to enforce the money bond, along with the mortgage.[28]

The mortgagor next defaults in paying interest according to stipulation but the mortgagee thereafter sues only for the arrears of interest. Can he sue again for the principal money? O. 2, R. 2, Note 10.

(2) A mortgage bond provides that the mortgage money should be paid in certain instalments but that if there is a default with regard to any instalment, the whole of the unpaid amount would be claimable at once. Default occurs, but the mortgagee sues only for the unpaid instalments. Can he sue again for the balance?

The question in both the above cases is the same, viz., whether the mortgagee has in such a case the option of waiving the benefit of the default clause. On this question there is a conflict of judicial opinion. It has been held by the High Court of Madras[32] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court, Nagpur,[33] that in such a case the mortgagee has an option of waiving the privilege accorded to him by the default clause and that a suit by him for the interest or instalments in arrears, as the case may be, does not bar a subsequent suit for the mortgage money.

But a contrary view was taken in Bombay,[34] Lahore[35] and Oudh.[36]

In this connection we have to note two decisions of the Judicial Committee.[37] In these two cases it was held that a second suit for the principal after the first suit for interest alone was barred under O. 2, R. 2. But these two cases were distinguished in the Madras cases cited above[38] on the ground that in both of them the first suit for interest was instituted after the expiry of the mortgage term.

An opinion has been expressed by Ramesam, J., that in cases where terms such as " when you require ", " when required ", " if you choose ", etc., are used, the mortgagee may be held to have an option of the kind discussed above.[39] It was also held in the undermentioned case[40] that the use of the expression "when required by you", clearly made a demand necessary for the cause of action to arise to sue for the entire amount. But it was also held in that case that apart from this consideration, the mortgagee has an option to sue for the principal or interest alone in such a case. This view was adopted by Venkatasubba Rao, J., in a later case[41] who also held that the absence of such words in the mortgage bond did not affect the question. But if the prior suit was based on an obligation independent of that upon which the later suit is based, then the later suit will not be barred. This would be the case where, apart from the mortgage, there is an independent personal obligation to pay the debt[42] or the interest thereon[43] and the prior suit for interest is based on such personal obligation and the later suit on the mortgage.[44] In such a case, though there may be a default clause in the mortgage deed providing that on the default being made in payment of interest the whole mortgage amount should become due and though the default may have occurred at the time of the prior suit, the prior suit on the personal obligation will not bar the later suit on the mortgage.

The conflict above referred to has now been set at rest by the Privy Council in Lasa Din v. Mt. Gulab Kunwar, 63 M. L. J. 187. Referring to clauses in mortgage deeds providing for the mortgage amount becoming payable on default in payment of instalments, their Lordships say:—"There can be no doubt that as pointed out by Lord Blanesburgh (in 48 All. 457), a proviso of this nature is inserted in a mortgage deed 'exclusively for the benefit of the mortgagees' and that it purports to give them an option either to enforce their security at once, or if the security is ample to stand by their investment for the full term of the mortgage." Thus the Madras view is upheld and the money will "become due" on default only if the "mortgagee exercised the option reserved to him".

If the default clause provides that on default in payment of interest at the due time, the mortgagee should be entitled to sell the properties for principle and interest, out of Court, and default occurs, but the mortgagee sues for interest alone, a subsequent suit for the principle is not barred. The reason is that the default did not entitle the mortgagee to sue for the mortgage money but only to have the properties sold out of Court.[45]

First suit for interest under a mortgage, second suit for possession.— A mortgage deed provides that on default in the payment of interest on the due date, the mortgagee should be entitled to take possession of the mortgaged property. Default occurring, the mortgagee sues only for interest. On fresh default occurring he sues for possession. Is the suit maintainable?

O. 2, R. 2, Note 10.

The answer to this question seems to depend on whether on the first default the mortgagee was entitled to sue both for interest and possession or whether he was entitled to sue either for interest or possession. In the former case the plaintiff is bound to claim both the reliefs on pain of his second suit for possession being barred.[46] In the latter case the second suit will not be barred.[47]

Lease to mortgagor by mortgagee with possession. First suit for rent, second suit for principal.—A mortgages his land with possession to B and as part of the same transaction B leases the land to A. In such a case, the lease forms in reality only an arrangement for the payment of interest. Hence, where after the principal money has become due, the mortgagee sues for rent alone, he cannot sue again for the principal.[48] But separate suits will lie where the lease and the mortgage constitute distinct and separate transactions.[48-a]

Partition suits.—A suit for partition of joint property must include the whole of the properties jointly held by the parties.[49] Where the suit does not comply with this rule, the penalty is not the dismissal of the suit but the bar of a fresh suit for the partition of the omitted items.[50] For instances of cases where such a subsequent suit has been entertained; see the following cases.[51] The following are the exceptions to the rule that such a suit would be barred.

O. 2, R. 2, Note 10.

(1) Where at the time of the previous suit the omitted portion was not available for partition at that time,[52] as for instance where it was in possession of a usufructuary mortgagee.[53]

(2) Where the omitted properties were in a different district.[54] The better view seems to be that even in such cases the bar of O. 2, R. 2, applies, as, under the present Code, there is no objection to the plaintiff bringing a single suit in such case.[55]

(3) Where the omission in the previous suit was due to ignorance of existence of the omitted items.[56]

A suit for partition of property held jointly by a Hindu family does not bar a suit for partition of property held by the family jointly with strangers, as the causes of action for the two suits are distinct.[57]

Where the alienee of a share of joint family property sues for partition, he must sue for general partition. Thus where the plaintiff acquired the shares of two out of five members of a joint family by two separate sale-deeds, it was held that his cause of action on both the sale-deeds was one (i.e.) the right to sue the co-parceners for partition, and he cannot maintain two actions one on each sale-deed.[58] But in 14 I. C. 524 it was held that an alienee's suit for partial partition is not liable to be dismissed solely for that reason but that the defendant co-parceners can claim that there be a general partition. Further, the defendant can, always in such a suit, insist that the suit must be for general partition.[59]

For example of suits for partition based on distinct causes of action see the following cases.[60]

The rule against a suit for partial partition is not applicable to tenants-in-common, as in their case there is a separate cause of action in respect of

11. Minor.—Suppose the next friend of a minor suing on behalf of the minor omits to include in the suit a portion of the claim which he was entitled to make in respect of the same cause of action. Can the minor sue again in respect of it on attaining majority? He cannot[1] unless the omission in the previous suit was due to the gross negligence,[2] fraud,[3] glaring laches, caused by physical incapacity[4] on the part of the next friend or the acts of the next friend were unreasonable or improper in the conduct of the suit,[5] or the minor's interests were not properly safeguarded.[6]

12. Intentional Relinquishment.—Sub-Rule 1 of this Rule provides that a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring his suit within the jurisdiction of a particular Court. That means that in bringing the suit, he can, in his plaint, relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring it within the jurisdiction of a particular Court; if the suit is once instituted in a Court having no jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed for, the only order that the Court can pass is to return the plaint under the provisions of O. 7, R. 10, and not to allow the amendment of the plaint by relinquishment of reliefs, inasmuch as to allow such amendment will be to deal with a suit over which the Court has no jurisdiction.[1]

Where the plaintiff intentionally relinquishes any portion of his claim, he cannot subsequently bring a fresh suit in respect of it.[2]

13. Suit to include all reliefs in respect of the same cause of action.—Sub-Rule 3 provides that where a plaintiff is entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action, he may sue for all the reliefs or he may sue for one or more of them reserving, with the leave of the Court, his right to sue for the rest.

As to the effect of the omission to sue for all the reliefs, see Note 14 below.

14. Omission to sue for all reliefs.—If a plaintiff omits, without the leave of the Court, to sue for any of the reliefs which he is entitled to claim in respect of the cause of action, he shall not afterwards sue for the reliefs so omitted by him.[1] There are, however, exceptions to this rule.

(1) Where the right to relief in respect of which a further suit is brought, did not exist at the date of the former suit.[2]

15. Suits for possession and rent.—Where, under a contract of lease, A, the lessee, is bound to pay the rent at the stated periods, and on default, to deliver up possession to the lessor B, and on such default occurring, B sues A for possession first and then brings a subsequent suit for rent, is the latter suit barred? The answer to this depends upon the question whether the two suits are treated as being based on the same, or on different causes of action. It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that there is one cause of action for both the suits and that therefore the second is barred.[1] The High Court of Allahabad,[2] Lahore[3] and Madras[4] have, on other hand held that the causes of action for the two suits are different and the second suit is therefore not barred.

16. Suits for specific performance and possession.—Where A sues B for specific performance of an agreement to sell, and subsequently on the basis of the same agreement, sues for possession, the suit is barred under this rule inasmuch as the reliefs in both flow from the same cause of action.[1] But where the subsequent suit is based on the conveyance obtained in pursuance of the decree in the first suit, the cause of action is different, and the suit is not barred.[2] Where A first sues for possession and later on for specific performance, both being based on the same agreement. The latter suit is barred.[3]

When A first agreed to sell his property to B, and then agreed to sell the same to C and therefore B sued A for an injunction restraining A from executing a sale to C and, on that suit, being dismissed, again sued A for specific performance of his agreement, it was held that the suit is not barred.[4]

O. 2, R. 2, Notes 17—18.

17. Partition Suits.—A partition suit should as has been seen in Note 10, ante, include the entire divisible property of the parties. Similarly, a plaintiff who omits to ask for any relief which he could have claimed in a suit for partition cannot bring a separate suit for such relief. Thus matters such as a charge of negligence against the manager[1] should be dealt with when accounts are taken in the partition suit and not by separate suit.[2]

But a suit for damages for use and occupation during the period the partition suit was pending is based on a different cause of action[3] as also a suit on a promissory-note executed by one member of a joint Hindu family in favour of another.[4]

18. Mortgage suits.—For a full discussion see Note 10 above.

In a suit for redemption, all claims between mortgagor and mortgagee should be settled, and a separate suit for excess profits received by the mortgagee cannot be brought even though such profits may accrue after the institution of the suit.[1] But a separate suit is maintainable for the mesne profits accruing after the date of payment under the preliminary decree.[2] There is, however, one case in which it has been held that the plaintiff is bound to claim mesne profits upto to delivery of possession[3] while, on the other hand, there is a decision to the effect that a separate suit lies for mesne profits accruing after the decree.[4]

Where a usufructuary mortgagee being deprived of possession, sues for possession alone, and fails to pray in the alternative for the return of the mortgage money, under Transfer of Property Act, S. 68 he cannot, on his suit for possession being dismissed sue for the mortgage money.[5]

20. Leave of Court.—Under sub-Rule 3, where a plaintiff is entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action but omits to ask for some of them, he shall not, except where the omission has been with the permission of the Court, sue again for them.[1] The leave need not be express but may be inferred from the circumstances of the case.[2] The competence of the Court to grant leave is not affected by the value of the relief sought to be omitted.[3] But as has been seen in Note 10 ante its power is confined to reliefs only and does not extend to allowing a splitting up of claims.[4]

Under the Code of 1882 the leave had to be obtained before the first hearing. The said words having been omitted in this Code, it would seem that the leave may be granted at any stage of the suit.

21. Identity of the parties necessary for the application of the section.—In order that R. 2 may apply, the two suits must be between the same parties[1] or between persons claiming through the same parties.[2] Thus against the puisne mortgagee is not barred.[7] The decision in 32 All. 119 is open to the same criticism as has been made about 22 All. 307 in illustration (2) above. See 35 M. L. J. 1 (P. C.), where the effect of S. 89, Transfer of Property Act is considered. Similarly a suit by the puisne mortgagee for sale without impleading the prior mortgagee does not bar a suit for redemption of the prior mortgage.[7-a]

6. A suit for redemption against a mortgagee is no bar to suit for contribution against a co-mortgagor.[8]

7. A suit for accounts and profits against a co-sharer does not bar a suit for profits against the same person as lambardar.[9]

8. In the case of joint promissors separate suits are maintainable against each of them, because under the Indian Contract Act, joint promissors are jointly and severally liable.[10]

9. Where certain trustees had failed to ask for a certain relief in a suit brought by them, the Advocate-General is debarred from suing for that relief subsequently.[11]

10. A suit against J. M. and against "Picture Palace", Nos. 84 and 85 by managing proprietor J. M. are against different defendants.[12]

11. A suit for profits by plaintiff in respect of his own share is no bar to a suit by him as the assignee of the profits due to another co-sharer.[13]

12. A suit against a mother in her personal capacity on a mortgage executed by her on behalf of her son is no bar to a suit against the son on the basis of the mortgage.[14]

13. A suit for specific performance of a contract of sale against A is no bar to a suit for possession against A and B in whose favour A had executed a conveyance.[15]

14. A suit for partition of properties held jointly by the plaintiff's family is no bar to suit for partition of properties held by the family jointly with strangers.[16]

22. The previous decision must have been on the merits to operate as a bar.—O. 2, R. 2 will not operate as a bar where the decision in the previous suit has not been on the merits. Thus, where the judge in the previous suit has refused to adjudicate on a certain matter a fresh suit in respect of it is not barred.[1]

Similarly, where a previous suit has been dismissed on the ground of technical defect, the bar of O. 2, R. 2 does not apply.[2] As has been seen already in Note 10 ante where a plaint has been returned for representation to the proper Court or where the suit is withdrawn with leave to sue again under O. 23, R. 1 the fresh suit may include reliefs omitted in the prior plaint.

23.—Rule does not apply to different causes of action.—The rule does not require that the plaintiff should unite in the same suit all the causes of action he may have against the defendant. So, it does not operate as a bar when the subsequent suit is based on a cause of action different from that on which the first suit was based,[1] although such cause of action may arise on a cause of action different from that of the first. The High Court of Allahabad[2] and the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court[3] have taken a contrary view. There is also a conflict of opinion as to the maintainability of a separate suit for mesne profits accruing after the institution of the prior suit for possession, some cases being in favour of the maintainability of such a suit[4] and others being against it.[5] But where the claims for possession and mesne profits are based on the same allegations of facts, the reliefs cannot be split up.[6]

Though a suit for possession and a suit for mesne profits may be treated as being based on distinct causes of action, a claim for mesne profits cannot itself be split up; the plaintiff should include the whole of the mesne profits accrued due at the time of the suit.[7]

A suit for mesne profits is no bar to a subsequent suit for possession.[8]

25. First suit for interest, second for principal.—See Note 10 ante, under the heading "first suit for interest on a mortgage and second suit for the principal".

26. Other Examples.—

(1) A sues B for injunction restraining B from interfering with A's possession. The suit is dismissed as A is found not to be in possession. A then sues B for possession. The suit is not barred.[1]

(2) A sues B for declaration of his right to certain land. The suit is dismissed on the ground that A might and ought to have sued for possession. Then he sues B for possession. The suit is not barred as the causes of action for the two suits are not the same.[2]

(3) The dismissal of a suit for specific performance of an agreement to transfer land is no bar to a suit for the return of the consideration money.[3]

(4) The dismissal of a suit for sale as on a simple mortgage does not bar a suit for possession as on a usufructuary mortgage.[4]

(5) Where a suit is compromised, a second suit based on the compromise is not barred.[5]

(6) Distinct trespasses on different parts of the plaintiff's land committed at different times give rise to different causes of action.[6]

(7) A person whose property had been wrongfully attached in execution of a decree, sued for and obtained a decree that the property was not liable to attachment and sale under the decree. This does not bar a suit for damages for wrongful attachment.[7]

O 2, R. 2, Notes 27—30.

The Allahabad High Court has held in the undermentioned case that the suit which bears the later number should be presumed to have been filed later and should be held as barred.[2] According to the High Court of Madras, the plaintiff in such a case, should be given an option to choose as to which of the two suits should be dismissed and which should be allowed to go on.[3]

The bar of R. 2 applies only to a later suit. It does not apply to any other remedy open to the plaintiff.[4] Thus, a landlord who is precluded by R. 2 from suing for the rent of any particular year can enforce the summary process of distraint provided for by the Madras Rent Recovery Act.[5]

The burden of establishing a bar of the suit under O. 2, R. 2 is on the defendant,[6] and the Court is not bound to take up the point proprio motu.[7] Further the objection under O. 2, R. 2 should be treated as a preliminary point and the defendant cannot raise it for the first time in appeal except on terms which would indemnify the other side for the omission to take it at the proper time.[8]

28. Set-off.—A defendant who claims a set-off under O. 8, R. 6 is in the position of the plaintiff [Vide O. 8, R. 6 (2)] and if he omits any portion of the claim he is entitled to make by way of set-off he cannot subsequently sue in respect of it.[1]

29. Plea in defence not barred.—The rule precludes only a subsequent suit. It does not bar a plea in defence.[1]

30. Insolvency proceedings, not suits.—The rule, as has been seen already, merely bars a fresh suit on the same cause of action. It does not enable the official assignee to apply to the Insolvency Court for a declaration that the right of a certain creditor of the insolvent to sue for a certain debt is barred under this rule.[1]

31. Execution Proceedings.—O. 2, R. 2 does not apply to execution proceedings. (See notes under S. 141, C. P. C.) Thus, where a decree grants different reliefs, as, for example, possession of land and mesne profits, the decree may be executed by means of separate and successive applications in respect of each relief.[1] O. 2, R. 2, Notes 31—35.

The rules applicable to proceedings in execution are applicable to proceedings for restitution also, and hence, O. 2, R. 2 does not apply to such proceedings.[2]

But where a particular sum of money is due under the decree and the decree-holder fails, in his application for execution, to claim the whole amount, he cannot, on general principles of res judicata be allowed to apply again for the balance of the amount so omitted in the first application.[3]

32. Proceedings under Para. 20 of Sch. 2 of the Code.—The rule does not apply to an application to file an award under Sch. 2, Para. 20 of the Code. Hence, the failure to ask for possession in such an application does not preclude a separate suit for possession.[1] Similarly, where only one matter arising out of a dispute is referred to arbitration, a separate suit in respect of other matters arising from the same dispute is not barred.[2]

But the privilege of abandoning a portion of his claim to bring his suit within the jurisdiction of any Court applies also to an applicant for the filing of an award.[3]

33. Application to sue in forma pauperis.—An application to sue in forma pauperis becomes a suit only after it has been accepted. Hence, where it has been rejected it does not amount to a suit and therefore the provisions of O. 2, R. 2 do not apply to it.[1]

34. Exceptions to the rule as to the splitting up of claims.—See Note 14 ante.

35. Amendment of Plaint.—The bar of suit under this rule applies only where a decree has been passed in the previous suit. The rule does not preclude the amendment of plaint by the addition of the claim which had

36. Revenue and Village Courts.—The rule has been held to apply to proceedings in the Revenue Court for the recovery of the rent.[1] But proceedings in Revenue Court for partition are not "suits" and the rule does not consequently apply to them.[2]

The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are not applicable to Village Munsif's Court and hence, this rule does not apply to a suit brought in such Courts.[3]

R. 3. [S. 45, Paras. 1 and 3.] (1) Save as otherwise provided,[2] a plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action[3] against the same defendant,[6] or the same defendants jointly;[7] and any plaintiffs having causes of action in which they are jointly interested against the same defendant [10] or the same defendants jointly[12] may unite such causes of action in the same suit.

Joinder of causes of action.

(2) Where causes of action are united, the jurisdiction[16] of the Court as regards the suit shall depend on the amount or value of the aggregate subject matters at the date of instituting the suit.

1. Scope of the rule.—Order 1 relates to parties to suits. Order II relates to frame of suits. But the two orders cannot be treated as relating to two distinct topics. The question of parties involves that of a cause of action, and vice versa. A person is made a party because there is a cause of action against him, and when causes of action are joined, parties are joined.[1] This rule must, therefore, be read with O. 1, Rr. 1 and 3.[2] The Legislature, has in fact, effected a compromise of two fundamental principles by means of the rules, embodied in Orders 1 and 2, first, that needless multiplicity of suits should be avoided and secondly that the trial of suits should not be embarrassed by simultaneous investigation of totally unconnected controversies.[3] The rules in Orders 1 and 2 may thus overlap to some extent in their application to concrete cases.[4] A plaintiff may not only join different causes of action against the same defendant or the same defendants as provided in O. 2, R. 3 but he may also join different causes of action against different defendants if he is able to bring his case within the purview of O. 1, R. 3.[5]

The fact that several causes of action have been properly joined under this rule does not prevent the Court, whenever necessary, from holding separate trials of the different issues that may arise in the suit.[6]

The question of misjoinder must be decided on the allegations in the plaint and not on what is found to be correct ultimately.[7]

2. "Save as otherwise provided."—This rule is to be applied subject to any provisions of law to the contrary, such as rules 4 and 5 of this Order,[1] or the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act which enacts that a joinder of several causes of action against the same defendant in a rent suit is not competent.[2] This rule is also subject to the general principles of pleading, and a plaintiff cannot on the authority of this rule claim on alternative titles which arise out of inconsistent facts, though he may claim even on inconsistent titles.[3]

3. The rule presupposes several causes of action.—This rule enables the joinder of several causes of action in one suit subject to certain restrictions.[1] It presupposes that there are several causes of action to be united in a single suit; so where there is really but a single cause of action no question of misjoinder arises.[2] A joinder of several reliefs is not a joinder of several causes of action, in a suit based on a single cause of action,[3] nor does an ancillary relief claimed in a suit amount to a distinct cause of action.[4]

See also "Cause of action"—Section 20.

4. Cause of action.—See S. 20, Notes 14 to 31.

5. Alternative Reliefs.—Alternative reliefs may be claimed either on the same cause of action against different defendants or on different causes of action against the same defendant or defendants. The former class of cases is provided for in O. 1, R. 3. The present rule deals with the latter class of cases.[1]

Though, in the case of several defendants, this rule uses the word "jointly" and does not use the word "in the alternative" found in O. 1, Rr. 1 and 3, joinder of alternative causes of action will not be repugnant to this rule, provided in respect of each of the alternative causes of action, the several defendants are "jointly" interested.

6. One plaintiff, one defendant, several causes of action.—This rule authorises a plaintiff to unite several causes of action against a single defendant[1] subject, however, to the limitation that, if all the causes of action cannot be conveniently tried together, an order may be made directing separate trials of the same. But the joinder of numerous causes of action amounting to an abuse of the process of the Court is not contemplated by this rule. Thus where the plaintiffs joined in one action, claims for infringement of 23 patents, Collins, M. R., said: "Prima facie a dozen causes of action cannot be combined in one writ; they must be so intimately connected as to justify their being included in one writ".[2] A person who is made a defendant in different capacities is not the "same defendant" within the meaning of this rule.[3]

7. One plaintiff, two or more defendants—Causes of action joint against all the defendants.—It is a condition precedent to the applicability of the rule that the defendants must be jointly liable in respect of each and every one of the causes of action sought to be joined.[1] It is not, however, necessary, that each of such defendants should be interested in all the reliefs claimed provided they are interested jointly in the main questions raised in the litigation.[2] Thus where two agents are jointly liable to render accounts, though not each for the same period of time[3] or where several defendants are sued for refund of monies by each under a wrong order for rateable distribution[4] there is no misjoinder.

Where there is only a single cause of action against several defendants there can be no misjoinder of causes of action. Thus where A sues B and his mortgagee C for a declaration of his right to his share of the property and for possession thereof, the cause of action is the infringement of A's right by the mortgage and dispossession effected by B and C respectively, and consequently there is no misjoinder of defendants and causes of action.[5] Similarly when A sells a certain property to B and thereafter in execution of a decree obtained by X against A, the property is sold and purchased in portions by C, D and E, and B sues A, X and C, D and E to set aside the execution sale, the cause of action is only one against all the defendants and there is no misjoinder.[6]

Where possession is claimed against A and also against persons holding by derivative titles under A the cause of action is a single one and there is no misjoinder.[7] Thus where a reversioner sues to set aside the alienations by a Hindu widow in favour of several defendants, the suit is not bad for mis-joinder[6] inasmuch as the plaintiff's cause of action against the alienees is the same as that against the alienor from whom they derive their title.[9] Similarly where A leases certain lands to B and thereafter, ignoring the lease, again leases out the same in separate parcels to C and D and on that basis A, C and D dispossess B, a suit by B against A, C and D is not bad for misjoinder.[10] The position will be different where the defendants do not claim under the same trespasser[11] or where the unity of the cause of action is broken up by joining with it a cause of action on an alienation by a stranger.[12]

8. One plaintiff, separate causes of action against several defendants, (i.e.,) misjoinder of defendants and causes of action.—A suit against several defendants for causes of action accrued against each of them separately and in respect of which they are not jointly liable is bad for misjoinder.[1] "Such a joinder complicates the case before the judge and renders it exceedingly difficult for him in dealing with the case of each defendant to exclude from his consideration those portions of the evidence which may not be admissible against him, though admissible against one or more of the others. Moreover, it is vexatious and harassing to the different defendants.[2] In Sethuratnam Iyer v. Venkatachala Goundan[3] where a single suit was filed to eject several tenants in possession of different parcels of the land of the plaintiff Sir Lawrence Jenkins, in delivering the judgment of the Board, said: "They (the defendants) are not in joint possession; on the contrary, they have separate holdings and should have been separately sued..... But the plaintiff, in disregard of the provisions of the Code, has united in the same suit not merely several causes of action but several actions or suits against separate defendants with the result that the litigation has been conducted throughout as though the defendants were a community with common interests." The principle underlying the said observation equally applies to suits for possession against several trespassers,[4] unless the trespass is committed jointly by all the defendants.[5]

Where the first defendant was the executant of a bond to the plaintiff and in a suit for the money due on the bond the other defendants were joined on the ground that they had colluded with the 1st defendant in taking assignments of his property to defraud the plaintiff.[6] Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that there was a misjoinder, as the plaintiff's cause of action for the money was only as against the 1*st defendant* and not as against the other defendants.

In suits on contracts, strangers to the contract having distinct interests by themselves cannot be joined,[7] but if the third party is only a benamidar[8] or is otherwise liable in law for the contract[9] there is no distinct interest. Where several defendants enter into contracts with the plaintiff but each is liable only for his transaction separately[10] or where there is a separate cause of action against each of the several defendants[11] a single suit against all of them is incompetent.

A cause of action arising out of a joint liability of some defendants cannot be united with another cause of action under a transaction in which one of them alone was concerned.[12] Nor can separate causes of action against separate sets of defendants be joined in one suit.[13]

In suits for partition, no cause of action can be joined which has no bearing on the question of partition.[14] O. 2, R. 3, Notes 8—10.

Regarding suits for specific performance of contracts and suits for contribution, see the undermentioned cases.[15]

Though a suit may fall outside this rule, by reason of joinder of distinct causes of action, against different defendants, it may be supported by the terms of O. 1, R. 3, if the several causes of action are so connected with the same act or transaction as to give rise to a common question of law or fact at the trial.[16] See also notes to O. 1, R. 3.

9. Conspiracy to commit wrong or breach of contract.—Distinct causes of action against several defendants may be united in one suit if the joint liability of the defendants arises by reason of a conspiracy or common design to commit the injury.[1] Thus A and B combine together to assault C[2] or to keep him out of possession of certain lands,[3] a suit by C against A and B for damages for the assault or for declaration of his right to the property is maintainable. The view that the joinder will be bad if the conspiracy or common design is found against ultimately[4] does not seem to be sound inasmuch as the question of misjoinder must be decided on the allegations made in the plaint. See note 1 ante.

10. Two or more plaintiffs, one defendant—Plaintiffs jointly interested in the causes of action.—Where two or more plaintiffs are jointly interested in two or more causes of action against the same defendant, they can join all the causes of action in the same suit.[1] It is enough if the plaintiffs are jointly interested though not equally interested in the causes of action;[2] conflicting or antagonistic interests among the plaintiffs cannot be joint interest.[3]

This rule has no application when the cause of action is a single one, though all the plaintiffs may be jointly interested in it.[4] As has been seen already in Note 8 above this rule is subject to O. 1, R. 1 and therefore several plaintiffs may unite several causes of action in the same suit though they may not be jointly but severally interested in them all, provided their rights to relief arise out of the same act or transaction and a common question of fact or law arises for trial.[5]

11. Two or more plaintiffs, one defendant—Causes of action in which plaintiffs are severally interested—Misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action.—Under this rule more plaintiffs than one, having distinct causes of action, might join in a suit against the same defendant, only if they are all jointly interested in the causes of action. But this rule is to be read subject to the provisions of O. 1, R. 1. O. 1, R. 1 enables several plaintiffs to unite in one suit, though their causes of action may be distinct and separate, if their rights to relief arise out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions, and a common question of fact or law would arise if they brought separate suits. Thus two or more plaintiffs cannot properly unite in one suit two or more causes of action, in which they are separately interested unless they can do so under O. 1, R. 1.[1]

Where a single wrongful act or infringement, gives rise to separate causes of action in favour of several plaintiffs, a single suit by all of them is maintainable under O. 1, R. 1.[2-a] The undermentioned cases[2] held to be bad under the old Code may, it is submitted, be maintainable under O. 1, R. 1 of the present Code. It was decided under the old Code that claims to property by several plaintiffs under independent titles to portions thereof, cannot be joined in the same suit.[3]

Five persons brought a single suit against the same defendant basing their claim on a single contract. But the evidence revealed five different contracts, one with each of the plaintiffs. In such a case no question of misjoinder of parties or causes of action can arise. The suit will have to be dismissed on the ground, that there was no single contract in respect of which they can maintain a single suit. Nor could any one of the plaintiffs be granted the benefit of election under O. 1, R. 2 as no one plaintiff could be said to be entitled to the contract as set up.[4]

O. 2, R. 3, Notes 11—14.

12. Two or more plaintiffs suing two or more defendants on several causes of action must be jointly interested in each of the causes of action against all the defendants.[1]

13. Two or more plaintiffs, two or more defendants—Plaintiffs severally interested against defendants severally—Misjoinder of parties and causes of action.—Where each plaintiff has only a separate right against each defendant[1] or the defendants jointly,[2] or different sets of plaintiffs are separately entitled against different sets of defendants[3] the suit is bad for misjoinder. It may be here pointed out that where the several plaintiffs have separate rights against the defendants jointly, then such plaintiffs might join in the same suit.

14. Procedure in cases of misjoinder.—Under the old Code where the plaint was bad for misjoinder or multifariousness, the Court could return the plaint for amendment, or reject it or dismiss the suit if the necessary amendment is not made. If the suit was dismissed, and the plaintiff appealed, the appellate Court might remand it for returning the plaint for amendment.[1]

O. 2, R. 3, Notes 14—17.

Under the provisions of the present Code, S. 99 and O. 2, R. 7, the misjoinder is regarded only as an irregularity and no suit will be dismissed on the mere ground of misjoinder of causes of action.[2] As a general rule the question of misjoinder will not be considered unless objection is taken at the proper time. See Rule 7 of this Order. When a valid objection is taken at the proper time the Court may allow appropriate amendments or withdrawal under the provisions of the Code.[2-a] This power exists, though, with regard to cases of misjoinder of causes of action, there is no provision in this Code corresponding to O. 1, R. 9 relating to misjoinder of parties. A plea of misjoinder cannot under the present Code be taken in appeal as a ground for the reversal of a decree or for a remand unless it has affected the merits of the case or jurisdiction of the Court[3] see S. 99 ante. If the merits have been affected the Court may remand the case for a separate finding on any one or more of the claims in the suit[4] or for any amendment that may be deemed necessary.[5]

15. Addition of unnecessary parties.—The question of misjoinder will have to be determined only with reference to necessary parties in the suit. So in suits for pre-emption where the vendor is not a necessary party to the suit, the joinder as defendants of different vendors of the same vendee, will not make the suit bad for misjoinder.[1]

16. Jurisdiction.—The value of a suit in which more causes of action than one have been united is the aggregate value of the several subject matters at the date of suit.[1]

17. Revision.—Where the Lower Court either misunderstands the nature of judicial discretion or otherwise wrongly holds that a suit is bad for misjoinder of causes of action, a revision will lie.[1]

1. Legislative changes.—

1. The words "or to obtain a declaration of title to immoveable property" which occurred in the old S. 44 (a) have been omitted.
2. The words "or any part thereof" have been added to clause (a).
3. Clause (c) of the old Code has been omitted and a new clause has been substituted.
4. The proviso to the rule is new.

2. Scope of the rule.—This rule declares that, in suits for the recovery of immoveable property, only the claims specified in the three clauses can be joined.[1] If any other claim is sought to be added the leave of the Court must be obtained; and such leave may be granted if the claims joined may be conveniently disposed of in one suit. The object of the rule appears to be, to avoid a joinder of claims of a character dissimilar to a claim for recovery of immoveable property.[1-a] and to prevent consequent embarrassment in the trial of the suit.

The rule does not apply to a joinder of several claims where the relief sought is based on the same cause of action. Nor does it apply to joinder of several claims all for the recovery of immoveable property.[2] On the contrary, Rule 3 warrants the joinder of such claims against the same defendant or defendants jointly.

This rule applies to counter-claims also.[3]

3. Suit must be for the recovery of immoveable property.—This rule will have no application unless the suit is for the recovery of immoveable property.[1] The omission of the words "or to obtain a declaration of title to immoveable property" in S. 44-A of the Code of 1882 has rendered this rule inapplicable to a suit for declaration of title. Such a suit is not one for the recovery of immoveable property.[2] A suit upon a mortgage for recovery of money and a claim for arrears of rent on the lease of the mortgaged property executed by the mortgagor[3] or a suit for a share in a mortgage decree[4] or a suit for a specific performance of an agreement to sell immoveable property[5] is not a suit for recovery of immoveable property within the meaning of this rule. So also a suit to restrain a trespass on immoveable property is not a suit for the recovery of immoveable property.[6]

4. Leave of Court—When can be granted.—Though the leave of the Court must ordinarily be obtained before instituting the suit, it can be obtained even afterwards in proper cases.[1] Where leave of the Court would be necessary for the joinder of several claims it is optional with the plaintiff either to apply for leave under this rule or to file separate suits in respect of each of them; this rule does not compel him to obtain leave and assert all his claims at the same time.[2]

Where leave is not obtained as required by this rule and a suit is dismissed on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action, the time occupied in the previous proceedings may be deducted in computing the period of limitation for instituting separate suits.[3] O. 2, R. 4, Notes 4—6.

5. Joinder of claims for mesne profits or arrears of rent Cl. (a).—As to whether claims for recovery of immoveable property and claims for mesne profits before suit—constitute one cause of action or distinct causes of action, there is a conflict of opinion. According to one view, Cl. (a) itself shows that they constitute different causes of action. According to the other view Cl. (a) is not really an exception but is merely an explanation. See the cases in Note 24 to O. 2, R. 2.

6. Claims in which relief is sought on the same cause of action.—Cl. (c) is not really an exception to the rule, but has been inserted in order to avoid the possibility of mistake and to make the rule perfectly clear.[1] This rule has to be read with O. 2, R. 2 which directs that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the same cause of action.[2] Therefore there is nothing irregular in seeking to recover in one suit immoveable and moveable property, if the cause of action is the same in respect of both.[3]

Illustrations.

1. A Hindu widow sues her husband's co-parceners for recovery of immoveable and moveable properties, being her deceased husband's share in the family properties under a partition which had not been completed during her husband's lifetime. The suit is not bad for misjoinder under this rule. Ganesh Dutt v. Tewach, I. L. R. 31 Cal. 262 P. C.

2. A files an administration suit in which he joins a claim to a relief in regard to a partnership business and a claim for the recovery of immoveable property on the same cause of action. The suit is not bad for misjoinder.[4]

But if the two claims are based on different causes of action, the joinder of the two claims will violate this rule.[5] Thus in a suit against an administrator to recover damages for malfeasance, a claim for the recovery of immoveable property in the hands of the administrator and certain others, cannot be joined.[6] But though the plaintiffs may sue on a single cause of action, it may entitle him to various kinds of relief. In such a case no leave of the Court is necessary to bring a suit for all such reliefs. Thus, no leave is required to join a claim for an injunction, or for an account of rents and profits, or for appointment of a receiver, or for any declaration that merely establishes the plaintiff's right to possession, inasmuch as all these things, are simply machinery to enforce the plaintiff's one cause of action.[7]

7. Suit for foreclosure or redemption—Proviso.—The High Court of Patna has held in the undermentioned case[1] that, where in a suit for redemption, the plaintiff claimed to be put into possession of the mortgaged property not only as against the mortgagee but also against persons in possession under a paramount title, leave of the Court is necessary for a joinder of those claims.

8. Objection as to misjoinder of causes of action.—See rule 7 below.

in one suit, provided the plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, sues or is sued as such. O. 2, R. 5, Notes 1—3.

(b) A claim by or against an executor, etc., as such cannot be joined with a claim by or against him personally in the same suit except

(i) Where the personal claim arises with reference to the estate of the deceased or

(ii) Where the plaintiff or defendant was jointly entitled to or liable for with the deceased in regard to the personal claim.

This rule deals with suits by or against only 3 classes of persons viz., executors, administrators or heirs. But those are not the only classes of persons who owe their legal condition to the death of another. A Legatee or the next of kin, for example, also come under the same category. The reason why executors, administrators and heirs are alone singled out by the legislature in the rule is that, while acquiring title from the deceased in the same manner as the legatees or the next of kin, they, in addition represent him. The closing words of this rule indicate this reason.[1] For the application of the principle of this rule to execution proceedings, see the case in foot-note.[2]

2. Claim by or against executor, administrator or heir as such.—A person is said to claim qua heir when, in making the claim, he is alleged to represent the estate of a deceased person. The words "claim by an heir as such" mean claim by him in a representative capacity, that is, as representing the person whose heir he claims to be.[1] He is not claiming as an heir if he claims for himself; for, the fact of his being an heir is only the foundation of his claim and does not give him a representative capacity. Where, for example a Muhammadan widow sues her daughters for her share in her deceased husband's estate,[2] or A sues the executors of B for property in their possession on the ground that A inherited the property from B[3] the claim of the plaintiff is not as an heir but in one's own and personal right.

In a suit to administer the assets of a deceased person various acts of maladministration may be sought to be redressed in the same suit.[4]

Under S. 328 of Act X of 1865, an administrator is liable for neglect to get in any part of the property of deceased person.[5]

3. "Estate"—Meaning of.—The word "Estate" means not only the estate rightly and properly held by executors, but also the "estate" which they hold in the belief that they are executors.[1] The claim of a Hindu widow of a deceased undivided co-parcener for maintenance against the surviving co-parceners, is not against the estate of the deceased husband.[2]

4. Joinder of personal claims when permissible.—A personal claim can be joined with a claim as representing the estate, if it arises with reference to the same estate. Thus a suit against an executor for the administration of the estate of a deceased person, and for an account of the partnership carried on by the executor and the deceased is not bad for misjoinder.[1] Similarly where A and B carried on a partnership and after A's death his son C continued the partnership with B, and subsequently C, as administrator sued B for accounts of the partnership between A and B and also for dissolution of his own partnership it was held that there was no misjoinder inasmuch as his personal claim arose out of the estate.[2] The expression "arises with reference to" is not to be narrowly construed.[3]

5. Amendment of plaint.—Where two claims are joined in contravention of this rule, the practice is to amend the plaint by striking out one of them and proceeding with the other.[1]

Order 2, Rule 6—Note 1.

(1) Muthappa v. Muthu Palni, (1904) 27 Mad

Under the Code of 1882, the power given by this rule could be exercised only before the first hearing, unless the parties otherwise agreed.[2] The words "before the first hearing" which occurred in the old section have now been omitted in this rule and the scope of this rule has been enlarged.

2. Power to order separate trials.—Where it appears to the Court that any causes of action joined in one suit cannot be conveniently tried or disposed of together, it may order separate trials.[1] If the facts alleged in the plaint arise out of facts that are common to two causes of action joined in one suit, the Court should not exclude one of them on the ground that it would not be convenient to try those two causes of action together.[2] In cases where the Court orders separate trials, it should deal with separate causes of action as sub-suits under the title and number of the principal suit from which they spring,[3] and should not order the plaintiff to file separate plaints.[4]

3. Powers of the appellate Court.—If the trial Court does not think fit to act under this rule but tries all the causes of action together, it is not proper for the appellate Court to interfere with the discretion of the trial Court in that matter.[1]

4. Consolidation of suits.—Although the Code contains no express provision, it has an inherent power Ex debito Justitioe to consolidate proceedings.[1] Such power will be exercised only where it is asked for, before the trial of the suits begin, and only, where the parties are the same and the evidence given is common in all cases.[2] If the trial Court consolidates cases, and passes a single decree, a single appeal may be preferred against the decree.[3]

Should the plaintiff not comply with the Court's order, the Court shall proceed as provided in Rule 18 of Order VI and as required by the provisions of the Court Fees Act.

Synopsis.

1. Objections to misjoinder of causes of action.
2. Waiver of objections.

1. Objections to misjoinder of causes of action.—Under Ss. 46 and 47 of the old Code, a plaint which was bad for misjoinder of causes of action could be returned for amendment under S. 53 thereof; failure to comply with the order for amendment resulted in the rejection of the plaint. These provisions have not been re-enacted in this Code and this rule provides instead, that an objection on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action, must be taken at the earliest possible opportunity, and, in all cases in which issues are settled, at or before such settlement of issues. The wording is similar to that in O. 1, R. 13.

The plea of misjoinder cannot for the first time be taken in appeal or in second appeal.[1] The defect of misjoinder is not a ground for reversing a decree; for S. 99 provides that no decree shall be varied or reversed on account of misjoinder of causes of action, unless the defect has affected the merits of the case or jurisdiction of the Court.[2] If an objection as to misjoinder is taken in the written statement, the Court must raise an issue and decide it.[3] Where in a case requiring leave under O. 2, R. 4 an objection as to misjoinder is raised but nothing is said about it in the judgment, the Court must be deemed to have impliedly granted the necessary leave.[4] Where a suit is bad for misjoinder of causes of action, the Court should not dismiss the suit; but should give the plaintiff an opportunity to amend his plaint and to proceed with the claim in respect of one of the causes of action.[5] O. 2, R. 7, Notes 1—2.

2. Waiver of objections.—An objection on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action being of a "dilatory character and quite besides the merits" will be deemed to have been waived if not taken at the proper time.[1] The same will be the case where the objection is raised but not pressed.[2] It has been held by the Bombay High Court that even if a party to the suit waives his objection on this point, it is still open to the Court to take the objection at any time on its own initiative and adopt the procedure laid down in Rule 6 of this order.[6]

1. Amendments after 1908.—By the Civil Procedure (Second Amendment) Act, XXII of 1926, the words "appearing, applying or acting" were substituted for the words "duly appointed to act" which occurred after the words "or by a pleader".

2. Scope of the rule.—This rule enacts that an appearance application or act, in or to any Court may, except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, be done

(1) by a party in person, or

(2) by his recognised agent, or

(3) by a pleader, appearing, applying or acting on his behalf.

This is the general rule. There are, however, other modes of appearances, applications, or acting, expressly prescribed by the Code for particular cases which, by reason of the words "except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force" are taken out of the operation of the general rule to the extent so prescribed. Thus O. 5, R. 1, sub-Rule 2 enacts that a defendant to whom summons has been issued under sub-Rule 1 may appear

(a) in person, or

(b) by a pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit, or

(c) by a pleader accompanied by some person able to answer all such questions.

The form of summons given in form No. 1 of Schedule B of the Code also requires the defendant to appear in the above manner. The test, therefore, as to whether a defendant has appeared is to see whether such of the requirements of O. 5, R. 1 and of the summons, as relate to appearance have or have not, been complied with.[1] A defendant who is not present in person at the hearing[2] and whose pleader is also absent or has no instructions to go on with the case[3] cannot be said to have appeared at the hearing. O. 3, R. 1, Notes 2—4.

Other express provisions to the contrary are furnished by O. 33, R. 3 and O. 44, R. 1 under which an application to sue or appeal in forma pauperis should be presented to the Court in person unless he is exempted from appearing in Court.[4]

This rule does not recognise the practice of parties, their agents or their pleaders making applications to the Court by post.[5]

3. Appearance and act.—"These words have a well defined and well-known meaning. To appear for a client in Court is to be present and to represent him in the various stages of the litigation at which it is necessary that the client should be present in Court by himself or by some representative. To act for a client in Court is to take on his behalf in the Court, or in the offices of the Court, the necessary steps that must be taken in the course of the litigation in order that his case may be properly laid before the Court."[1]

4. Appearance of party in person.—The mere presence of a party in Court at the hearing is sufficient to constitute "appearance".[1] The purpose for which he appeared or the action which he took on appearance is immaterial.[1-a] Thus, the fact that he asks for adjournment which is refused,[2] or that he does not put in any answer or written statement,[3] will not prevent his presence from being an "appearance". Where the party does not actually appear before Court when the suit is called on for hearing, the fact that he was present in the precincts of the Court house[3-a] or the fact that he appeared on a previous occasion[3-b] do not constitute appearance. But suppose a party has engaged a pleader and is also present in Court at the hearing. It has been held by the High Court of Bombay[4] where the pleader so engaged is absent at the hearing but the party himself is ready to go on with the case, he must be deemed to "appear" in the case. According to the High Court of Madras, where the pleader so engaged reports "no instructions" and the party takes no further part in the proceedings his mere presence in Court will not make it an appearance in the suit.[5] The reason given is that the appearance contemplated by the rule must be not as a man but as a party and with the intention of acting as such party, and that his mere presence when his pleader reports no instructions will not amount to an appearance inasmuch as he is merely there as the person who is represented by the pleader. The High Courts of Calcutta[6] and Patna[6-a] have also taken a similar view.

A party can himself, appear, act or make applications on his behalf. A barrister or a pleader appearing before the Court as a litigant ought not to address the Court from the same place and in the same way as an advocate or even in the robes of such advocate or pleader.[7]

5. Appearance by recognised agent.—See O. 3, R. 2 and also S. 9, Agra Tenancy Act, III of 1926 and S. 32 (ii) of C. P. Land Revenue Act, II of 1917.

6. Appearance by pleader.—The appearance of the pleader of a party is, under this rule, equivalent to the appearance of the party himself.[1] The mere presence of the pleader, however, unlike the presence of the party, is not necessarily an "appearance" within the meaning of the rule.[2] We have seen in Note 2, supra that a defendant who has received a suit summons can under O. 5, R. 1, appear by a pleader only when he is duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit or when he is accompanied by some person able to answer all such questions. There is no specific provision that when a plaintiff appears by a pleader, the latter should be so instructed or accompanied. But it has been held that the principle of O. 5, R. 1 applies also to the case of a plaintiff appearing by a pleader.[3] In order therefore to constitute the presence of the pleader of a party, whether plaintiff or defendant, an "appearance" on his behalf, it is necessary that he should have been duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit.[4] Thus where the pleader of a party is absent,[5] or refuses to appear for him,[6] or reports " no instructions ",[7] or is instructed only to apply for an adjournment on the refusal of which he withdraws from the case[8] there is no " appearance " on behalf of the party. But if, without reporting " no instructions " he simply asks for an adjournment on the ground that he is not prepared with the case, it cannot be said that there is no appearance.[9]

8. Direction to appear in person—proviso.—A Court has jurisdiction to direct, under this proviso, a party to appear in person, and on his failure to do so, to dismiss the suit under O. 9, R. 12.[1] Where in a suit for rent, the defendant pleaded discharge but was prepared to withdraw the plea if the plaintiff would depose that there was no discharge and thereupon the Court ordered the plaintiff's appearance under O. 10, R. 4, and on his failure to do so dismissed the suit under that rule, it was held that the proper procedure was to have ordered the plaintiff to appear under this proviso and not under O. 10, R. 4.[2] Where the Court directs the attendance of a party but omits to quote the section under which the order is made, it must be deemed to be made under this rule.[3]

The word "general" preceding the words "powers of attorney" and the sentence "from parties not resident within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court within which limits the appearance application or act is made or done" which occurred in the old section have now been omitted from sub-clause (a). The result is that the rule has become more comprehensive and authorises any person holding a simple power of attorney to act or make applications or appearances in Court. The clause making specific provisions for mukhtears was therefore found unnecessary and has been deleted.[1] See undermentioned cases relating to mukhtears.[2]

The last paragraph of old S. 37 directing the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, the Chief Commissioner of Oudh and the Central Provinces to declare from time to time, the persons competent to act as recognised agents of parties, has been omitted as being no longer necessary.[3]

2. Persons holding powers of attorney.—As seen in Note 1 already, it was necessary under the old S. 37 that the principal should be a person not resident within the jurisdiction of the Court.[1] But the term "non-resident" was construed very liberally.[2] The Bombay High Court has, however, amended the present rule by practically bringing it in conformity with the old section.[3]

An agent who holds a power of attorney should be allowed to appear and act under this rule but the defendant may question his authority to do so.[4] He can show that a plaint signed by an authorised agent is not valid by reason of the suit not having been instituted with the approval of the plaintiff.[5] It is the duty of the first Court to decide the question of authority; it should not be left for decision to the appellate Court.[6]

A recognised agent is competent to refer a matter in dispute to arbitration[7] unless specially restricted by the power[8] and may file an affidavit of documents[9] or sign an amended plaint;[10] but all acts and appearances should be done only on behalf of and in the name of the plaintiff. He cannot bring the suits in his own name.[11] He has no right of audience and cannot plead or examine witnesses.[12] No power can be given in such a way as to evade the special provisions relating to the appointment of pleaders.[13]

Where there is a valid authority, mere formal defects will not invalidate the acts of the agent.[13-a] Thus a defect in the signature in the plaint[14] or in the description of the agent[15] is only an irregularity and does not invalidate the proceeding. It has been held that even where there is no authority originally to do an act, it could be given subsequently by the principal ratifying the unauthorised acts.[16] A suit should not be dismissed for defect in the authority of the agent, but should give the defaulting party an opportunity to remedy it.[17]

3. Power of attorney.—The term "power of attorney" is not defined in the Civil Procedure Code. Broadly speaking it is a formal instrument by which authority is conferred on an agent. Such an instrument should be construed strictly and as giving only such authority as it confers expressly or by necessary implication.

Every agent has got an implied authority to do whatever is necessary for, or ordinarily incidental to the effective execution of his express authority in the usual way.[1] Thus a power authorising a person to take all steps necessary to complete the execution of a decree can sign and present an execution application to save the decree from the bar of limitation.[1-a] Similarly an agent authorised to get a postponement of a judicial sale has power to raise a loan for the attainment of that object.[2] A power of attorney to defend a suit includes a power to appeal against an order refusing to set aside a decree passed ex parte[3] as it includes a necessary step for the defence in the suit or to establish the grounds of defence in the suit.[3-a]

The authority given must, however, be construed with reference to the special purpose for which it is given. Thus a power to conduct suits generally does not authorise the agent to bring them to a close in an out of the ordinary way.[4] An agent authorised to act only in connection with one particular matter as the realisation of an amount due, is one acting under a special power of attorney.[5] An authority to sign on behalf of the principal does not include a power to execute deeds as such.[6] Where the manager of a firm files the vakalat as its agent, it should be clearly described as such to avoid further litigation.[7]

4. Objection to authority.—An objection to the validity of a power of attorney must be taken very early at the trial Court, and if not taken must be deemed to have been waived.[1] A defect in the authority of the agent is only an irregularity not affecting the merits of the case within S. 99 of the Code and will not be a ground for interference in appeal.[2]

5. Persons carrying on business.—The person must really carry on business for and in the name of parties not resident within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court within which the applications, appearances or acts are to be done.[1] The sub-Rule refers to a Gumastha or person acting for others, and does not include a partner carrying on business for himself and for others.[2] When a firm has ceased to carry on business, a person engaged in collecting the assets of such a firm, is not a recognised agent according to the Calcutta High Court[3] but is one according to the Bombay High Court.[4]

6. Recognised agent of Government.—See O. 27, Rr. 2 and 4.

7. Recognised agent of Princes.—See also S. 85 ante.

Section 85 does not prevent the institution of a suit by an independent Prince in his own name and through a recognised agent appointed under this rule.[1]

A political agent appointed by the Government to manage the estates of a Chief, is not a recognised agent within the meaning of this rule so as to enable him to sue on behalf of the chief in British Courts.[2]

O. 3, R. 3, Note 1.

1. Service of process on recognised agent.—This rule provides for the mode of service of processes on a recognised agent, and says that service on a recognised agent is as effectual as service on the party in person. "It is not a mere question of constructive notice or inference of fact, but a rule of law which imputes the knowledge of the agent to the principal, or, in other words, the agency extends to receiving notice on behalf of his principal of whatever is material to be stated in the course of the proceedings".[1] The rule, however, does not prohibit service on the parties themselves.[2] A person holding a power of attorney is at liberty to refuse to accept service of summons and appear in a suit brought against the principal even though he is authorised by the power to appear and defend suits.[3] Service of notice on a muktear who is not the recognised agent of the judgment-debtor is not sufficient service within the meaning of this rule.[4]

1. Amendments after 1908.—The present rule was amended by the second amending Act of 1926. In sub-Rule 2 the words " when accepted by a pleader " which occurred after the words " every such appointment " have been omitted. Sub-Rules 2 to 5 and the proviso are new.

2. Scope of the rule.—This rule provides in what manner a pleader should be appointed and till what time the appointment is to be in force. It assumes that a pleader that is appointed, is competent to appear. It is only an enabling provision by which a pleader, when he accepts an engagement and files vakalatnamah, is entitled to conduct the proceedings till he or his client dies, or till the termination of the proceedings. It does not give an absolute right to any practitioner to appear in Court in any matter he chooses. It is subject to the rules governing the qualifications of the various classes of pleaders and the rules governing the procedure of Courts.[1] The proviso to R. 23 of the Appellate Side Rules of the Madras High Court requiring that when a vakalatnamah is executed by a man who is either blind, illiterate or unacquainted with the language in which the vakalatnamah is written, the officer before whom it is executed, shall certify that the contents of the vakalatnamah were explained to the executant who seemed to understand it and signed in his presence, is intra vires and does not conflict with anything that is contained herein.[2]

As to appointment of pleaders see Note 14, infra.

3. Pleader.—The term "pleader" signifies all persons who are entitled to appear and plead, and includes an advocate, vakil or attorney.[1] It must, however, be read in the narrowest sense and does not include agents.[1-a] A pleader in India combines in himself the duties performed in England by a Barrister and Attorney, in that he can both plead and act, whereas a Barrister can only plead and an attorney can only act.[2]

The status of an advocate of the Calcutta High Court, it has been held, does not differ from that of a Barrister in England.[3] In the undermentioned case[3-a] it was held that an advocate of the Allahabad High Court can also act for his client.

4. Authority to abandon issue or claim.—A Pleader's general powers in the conduct of a suit include, the power to abandon an issue, which, in his discretion, he thinks it inadvisable to press.[1] He may ask for an issue, or give up an issue, and the same will be binding on his client.[2] But he cannot relinquish a portion of the claim in the suit, unless specially authorised to do so.[3] It is the duty of the pleader in such cases to consult his client, and get his express consent before giving up any such portion of the claim.[4] Similarly a pleader cannot, unless authorised to do so, bring the suit to a close by offering to be bound by the oath of the opposite party.[5] An opinion expressed by the pleader in the course of arguments adversely to the claim of the client, which he undertook to advocate, is also not binding on the client.[6]

5. Power to make admissions.—Verbal admissions made by a pleader should be received with caution,[1] but the Court will nevertheless accept a statement of a pleader from the bar without burdening him with an oath.[1-a] An admission on a question of fact will always bind the client[2] unless the pleader has been induced or misled by a mistake[3] or misapprehension[4] as to the actual facts. An order or judgment based on the admission of the pleader, can generally speaking, be set aside upon any ground which would invalidate an agreement.[5] But a party repudiating the admission should do so at the earliest possible opportunity.[6]

Admissions made by a pleader against instructions[7] or at a time when he was not engaged by the client[8] or as to what is beyond the scope of the suit[9] will not, however, bind the client.

An erroneous admission by a pleader on a question of law is of no effect and does not preclude the party from claiming his legal rights in a higher tribunal.[10]

6. Power to withdraw suit.—A vakalatnamah couched in general terms suffices prima facie to authorise a pleader to apply for a withdrawal of the suit and, in the absence of anything to show that the pleader has acted contrary to instructions or is otherwise guilty of misconduct, the client is bound by such act on the part of the pleader.[1]

7. Power to compromise the suit.—In the absence of specific authority, a pleader ordinarily employed cannot enter into a compromise on behalf of the client, and, if he does so, the compromise is not binding on the client[1] unless the latter acquiesces in or ratifies the same.[2] Where the original vakalatnamah itself specially empowers the pleader to compromise the suit, no second or special vakalatnamah is again necessary to compromise it.[3] A strict interpretation ought to be placed upon the terms empowering the pleader to enter into a compromise.[4] Thus, a power to file a compromise does not include a power to make a compromise or sign it;[5] nor does an authority to compromise

a suit necessarily give an authority to negotiate the terms thereof without reference to his client.[6]

A counsel, as distinguished from a pleader can compromise a suit in the absence of any limitation on his authority. Express authority as in the case of a pleader is not required.[7] But his authority extends only to matters involved in the suit and not to collateral matters.[8]

As regards attorneys or solicitors the law in England is that they are entitled in the exercise of their discretion to enter into a compromise on behalf of the client. If they act bona fide and not against the express directions of the client, the compromise will be binding on him.[9]

A compromise entered into by a pleader duly authorised cannot be interfered with unless there is fraud, collusion, mistake, or misapprehension on the part of the pleader.[10] But the Court has plenary powers to enquire into the justice or the bona fides of a settlement reported to it[11] and where grave injustice is likely to result by allowing the compromise to stand, it can interfere and set it aside.[12] Where the client expressly prohibits the compromise and notifies his dissent to the opposite side, the compromise is not valid and will be set aside.[13]

8. Power to refer to arbitration.—Section 506 of the old Code (Sch. II, para. 1) required special authority for a pleader to make reference to arbitration. In the present Code, the words as to special authority have been omitted (vide Schedule II, para. 1). The effect of the omission is according to the High Court of Lahore and the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court, that a pleader can on the strength of his general power, refer to arbitration on behalf of his client.[1] A contrary view has been taken by the High Court of Patna and the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court.[2]

But if the reference is made contrary to the client's instructions and he objects to such reference the award can be set aside.[3]

9. Delegation of authority.—Under the section as it stood before the amendment of 1926 referred to above, there was a conflict of opinion as to whether a pleader engaged by the party could delegate his authority to another pleader and request him to appear on his behalf.[1] Under the new proviso to the section, however, it is clear that such a delegation can be made.[1-a]

A presentation by the pleader's clerk is equivalent to a presentation by the pleader.[2] But the Punjab Chief Court has held that the Code does not recognise the status of a pleader's clerk.[3] The presence of the pleader's clerk will not, however, amount to appearance by the pleader himself.[4] Nor can the pleader completely delegate to his clerk the duties he owes to his client without being responsible for his defaults.[5]

10. Control and conduct of suit.—A counsel has authority to do what he considers best for his client in the management and conduct of the suit and if, in the exercise of such authority, he enters into any agreement with the opposite side it will be binding on the client unless any limitation was imposed on his authority and unless such limitation was communicated to the opposite side.[1] Parties are bound by the bona fide acts of their pleaders acting within the scope of their authority and a mere error of judgment on their part affords no valid ground for avoiding such acts.[2]

If a party has employed more than one pleader, the senior among them has the entire control of the case.[3]

O. 3, R. 4, Note 11.

11. Liability of pleader for misconduct.—A pleader is liable to be suspended or dismissed from practising if he is guilty of misconduct of the kind specified in S. 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act, XVIII of 1879. As to what amounts to misconduct and what does not, see the undermentioned cases.[1]

Practising in contravention of S. 10 of the Legal Practitioners Act, i.e., without a proper certificate as required by S. 7 of the Act amounts to misconduct.[2] A pleader who has been convicted of any criminal offence implying a defect of character which unfits him to be a pleader is liable to be suspended or dismissed by the High Court[3] (Section 12 of the Legal Practitioners Act). But before any action is taken, against a pleader he should be given notice of the charges levelled against him and an opportunity of vindicating his character.[4] The misconduct of a pleader cannot, however, be a ground for deciding the suit against his client.[5]

O. 3, R. 4, Note 12.

12. Privileges and rights of pleaders.—A pleader cannot, as a general rule, refuse to take up a case for any member of the public if a fair and proper fee is tendered to him, adequate instructions are given and the case is of a class which the lawyer is accustomed to take up. Such a refusal will amount to professional misconduct.[1] Of course, refusal to accept a brief for valid reasons like having to go to mofussil or having to attend some social function, or owing to physical incapacity cannot be questioned.[1-a] In the conduct of the suit he is entitled to examine witnesses in his chamber before examining them in Court.[2] He can also examine the documents produced by his witness or by his party before tendering them in evidence.[3]

A pleader is not liable for slander or libel in respect of words used by him in the course of a judicial enquiry.[4] The Court has no power to cut short his arguments unless they are irrelevant or involve a repetition.[5]

A pleader or solicitor has a lien on the papers entrusted to him until all his costs are paid off[6] and the Court will not grant the party leave to change his attorney until such costs are paid.[7] The lien is, however, an equitable one and can be claimed only as against the client and not third parties.[8]

A pleader who has not been paid by the client his remuneration can file a suit for the recovery of the fee agreed upon[9] or by way of quantum meruit under S. 65 of the Indian Contract Act.[10] No written agreement is necessary for such a suit.[11] A promissory note taken by the pleader and not filed in Court as required by S. 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act was, under the Legal

O. 3, R. 4, Notes 12—13.

Practitioners Act as it stood before 1926, held to be invalid and unenforceable.[12] Section 28 of that Act, however, has been repealed by Act XXI of 1926.

It may be usefully mentioned herein that a receipt given by counsel for payment made by the client is exempt from stamp duty.[13]

13. Duties.—When a pleader accepts a brief it is his bounden duty to attend to his client's interests throughout the proceedings in the case[1] to represent his interests properly[2] and to prosecute the case with due vigilance.[3] If he fails to do so, he is liable to be dealt with for neglect and is also answerable to the client.[4]

It is also the duty of a pleader to advise his client properly out of Court.[5] A pleader filing an obviously improper and groundless criminal complaint will be guilty of serious misconduct. It is his duty to make due enquiries of the clients and to act with such care and prudence that his good faith could not successfully be questioned.[6] It is not proper for a pleader to associate himself with reckless charges of fraud and criminality or to indulge in abuse; nor should he put questions attacking a witness's honour unless he has reasonable grounds for believing them to be true.[7]

A pleader having once appeared for a client should not appear against him in another litigation arising out of the same dispute[8] and use the information received formerly in his professional capacity.[9] Any contract entered into by the pleader with his client in respect of the subject of litigation or advice is liable to be questioned and undue influence will be presumed to have been exercised.[10]

Pleaders owe a duty not only to their clients but also to the Court and are bound to co-operate with the Court in the orderly and pure administration of justice.[11] Thus a pleader is bound to correct any errors committed by the Court of which he is aware[12] and bring to the notice of the Court facts within his knowledge such as the death of a party.[13] When a matter is heard ex parte, he is bound to bring to the notice of the Court adverse as well as favourable authorities on the point.[14] He cannot make personal attacks or unfounded charges of impropriety against the trial judge when the real ground is that he has failed to create an impression in his mind by arguments.[15] Unwarranted or unfounded attacks against the judge on the part of the pleader amount to misconduct.[16]

It is against the etiquette of the bar that a counsel should hold a brief and conduct a case in which he is himself a witness, and is personally interested.[17]

14. Appointment of pleaders.—It was held under the old rule that the appointment of a pleader should be in writing signed by the party or by the person acting on his behalf[1] and that it should be duly stamped.[2] It was held that the powers intended to be entrusted to a pleader should be specified in the vakalatnamah[3] though mere technical and formal defects therein did not invalidate the pleader's authority.[4]

O. 3, R. 4, Notes 14—16.

The manner of appointment under the present rule depends upon the purpose for which he is engaged. If he is appointed to act in Court, such appointment must, under sub-Rule 1, be in writing signed by the party or by a person duly authorised by him.[4-a] If the pleader is appointed for the purpose of pleading only he has to file only a memorandum of appearance signed by himself under sub-Rule 5.[4-b] Under the proviso to the rule a pleader who has been engaged by another pleader to act on behalf of a party can plead on behalf of such party without either filing a vakalatnama or a memorandum of appearance.[4-c]

The word ', High Court '' in sub-Rule 3 of the old rule was held to include the Patna High Court also.[5]

15. Acceptance of engagement.—The words '' when accepted by a pleader'' which occurred in the old Section after the words ''every such appointment'' in sub-Rule 2, have now been omitted. Under the old Rule, there was a conflict of opinion whether the acceptance had to be made in writing.[1] It was also held that the acceptance should be unconditional,[2] and that a pleader acting for a pardanashin lady should personally satisfy himself that the vakalat had been executed by her before accepting the same.[3]

16. '' Until determined with the leave of the Court.''—The appointment of a pleader may be put an end to by the client or the pleader; but in either case it can be done only with the leave of the Court.[1] Once a pleader is appointed his authority continues until and unless

(1) it is put an end to by a writing signed by the client or the pleader and filed in Court, or

(2) The proceedings in the suit terminate.[2]

The statute does not require the writing containing the withdrawal to be in any particular form. An endorsement on the back of the plaint that he (the vakil) has no instructions is sufficient.[3]

17. "Until all proceedings in the suit are ended."—A vakalatnamah once filed by a pleader in the suit remains in force until all the proceedings in the suit are ended so far as the client is concerned.[1] Thus a fresh vakalat is not necessary for the purpose of appearing in execution proceedings[2] or in appeal[3] or for setting aside an ex parte decree[4] or for an application to restore a suit dismissed for default.[5] Similarly no new vakalat is necessary for the purpose of appearing in the case after remand by the appellate Court[6] or after a plaint is returned for presentation to the proper Court.[7]

But there is no such general relationship as that of a pleader and client, of a standing and permanent character upon all occasions and for all purposes.[8]

5-B. Notwithstanding anything contained in Order 3, sub-Rules (2) and (3) of Rule 4 of the First Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, no pleader shall act for any person in the High Court, unless he has been appointed for the purpose in the manner prescribed by sub-Rule (1) and the appointment has been filed in the High Court.

Synopsis.

1. Service of process on pleader.

Shall be presumed. See Note 1, Pt. (9).

1. Service of process on pleader.—The words "relative to a suit or appeal" which occurred in the old Code have been omitted with the result that this rule now applies to all proceedings under the Code. The word "pleader" includes an attorney[1] as well as an advocate.[2] The words "personal appearance" include personal appearance to give evidence.[3]

A notice served on an attorney even after a decree nisi was passed and the party had left for England, has been held to be equivalent to service on the party.[4] Until the engagement of a pleader is legally determined, any process served on him will be effectual in spite of the pleader's endorsement thereon that he is no longer appearing for the party.[5] But when a proceeding is at an end the pleader does not continue to act for the party thereafter and service on the pleader is of no avail. Thus where an ex parte decree is passed and the suit comes to an end, a service on the pleader is not equivalent to a service on his client.[6] O. 3, R. 5, Note 1.

The process, in order to be effectual, must be addressed to the pleader on whom it is to be served.[7] The pleader himself may, however, waive the correct formalities in effecting service.[8]

The presumption referred to in the rule can be rebutted by actual proof that the pleader did not communicate the matter to the party.[9]

The rule applies only when the Court orders that process be served on the pleader.[10] The rule does not apply to criminal proceedings.[11]

ALLAHABAD.

For Rule 1 (1), substitute the following:—

"1. (1) Every suit shall be instituted by presenting to the Court or such officer as it appoints in this behalf, a plaint, together with a true copy for service with the summons upon each defendant, unless the Court for good cause shown allows time for filing such copies.

(2) The Court-fee chargeable for such service shall be paid in the case of suits when the plaint is filed and in the case of all other proceedings when the process is applied for."

Re-number the present sub-Rule (2) as sub-Rule (3).

OUDH.

To sub-Rule (2), add the following words:—

"and except with the permission of the presiding officer, for reasons to be recorded, no plaint shall be admitted until the necessary process-fee has been paid into Court."

NAGPUR.

Substitute the following for Rule 1 (1):—

"1 (1) Every suit shall be instituted by presenting to the Court or such officer as it appoints in this behalf a plaint together with as many true copies on plain paper of the plaint as there are defendants for service with the summons upon each defendant, unless the Court, for good cause shown allows time for filing such copies."

Add the following sub-Rule (2) to Rule 1 and re-number the present sub-Rule (2) as sub-Rule (3):—

1. Legislative changes.—

Sub-Rule (2) is new.

2. Plaint, meaning of.—See S. 26, note 3 and S. 2 (2), Note 5.

3. Presentation of Plaint.—The institution of a suit is ordinarily made by the presentation of a plaint to the Court or such officer as it appoints in this behalf and the time of institution for purposes of Limitation Act is the time of presentation of the plaint. See Limitation Act, 1908, S. 3, and Explanation thereof.[1]

4. Place of presentation of the Plaint.—The Court in which the plaint has to be presented is the Court of the lowest grade competent to try the matter under Ss. 15-20.[1] In the case of plaints presented to the Court which has no jurisdiction to try the same, see O. VII, R. 10 infra and S. 14 of the Limitation Act, 1908.

5. Plaint to whom to be presented.—The plaint must be presented either to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf.[1] The presentation, therefore, of a plaint to a person not so authorised,[2] or out of office hours, to an officer authorized to receive plaints only within office hours, is not a valid presentation, unless such presentation is ratified by the Court on that very day.[3] But the mere registration of a plaint subject to objections does not cure the defect.[4]

6. Time of presentation.—A plaint may be validly received on a Court holiday[1] or out of office hours at the Judge's club or at his private residence.[2] By such act of acceptance, the judge constitutes himself "an officer appointed in this behalf".[3] But the Court is not bound to accept it,[4] and when it refuses to do so the appellate Court will not interfere.[5] At the farthest an acceptance as aforesaid, is only an irregularity the right to object to which may be waived.[6]

S. 4 of the Limitation Act, 1908, provides that when the period of limitation for a suit, appeal, or application expires on a day on which the Court is closed, the suit, appeal, or application may be presented on the re-opening day.[7] Again under S. 14 of the Limitation Act, 1908, where the plaintiff prosecutes a suit bona fide in a wrong Court and upon a return of the plaint by that Court, represents it to the proper Court, the period during which the suit was being prosecuted in the wrong Court will be excluded in computing the period of limitation for instituting the suit.[8]

As to the validity of the other proceedings of the Court on holidays, see O. 20, R. 1, infra.

7. Mode of presentation.—The word "presenting" implies delivery to the Court or to its officer either in person or by a recognised agent or pleader of a party.[1] This is also made clear by O. 3, R. 1, ante which provides that any appearance, application or act in or to any Court by a party in such Court may, except where otherwise expressly provided, be done by the party in person or by his recognised agent or by his pleader. See also the rules of practice framed by the various High Courts.[2] The sending of a plaint by post[3] or the placing thereof on a table when the officer is not present[4] is, therefore, not a proper presentation. Similarly, the presentation of a plaint by a servant of the plaintiff who is not his recognised agent is not a valid presentation.[5] Where a plaintiff has attained majority before the institution of the suit but the plaint is presented by a person purporting to be next friend, the presentation is not invalid if the mistake is bona fide.[6]

8. Suit when commenced.—See S. 26.

9. Presentation of Plaint in Revenue Court.—Revenue Courts have no authority to specify certain days on which plaints shall not be received.[1]

O. 5, R. 1, Note 1.

Provided that no such summons shall be issued when the defendant has appeared at the presentation of the plaint and admitted the plaintiff's claim.

(2) A defendant to whom a summons has been issued under sub-Rule (1) may appear—

(a) in person, or

(c) by a pleader accompanied by some person able to answer all such questions.

(3) Every such summons shall be signed by the Judge or such officer as he appoints, and shall be sealed with the seal of the Court.

OUDH.

Rule 1-A.—Add a new sub-Rule (1-A) after sub-Rule (1) as follows:—

"(1-A) A party shall file with his application for the issue of a summons to the defendant or opposite party a printed summons form, in duplicate, one part being in the Urdu and the other in the Nagri character, duly filled up, except in respect of the date of appearance and of the summons, in a bold, clear and easily legible handwriting; provided that:—

(a) if the party to be served is a European British subject, the party applying for the summons shall file a special form which shall be filled up in English; and

(b) the presiding officer may, in his discretion, direct that such forms in general or that any particular such form be filled up entirely in the office of the Court."

2. Contents of summons.
3. Summons not necessary where defendant has appeared.

5. Fresh summons.
6. "To appear and answer."
7. Duly instituted. See S. 27.
8. Summons to what place to be issued.

1. "Summons may be issued."—Sub-Section (1) of this rule is based on the maxim Audi alteram partem "hear the other side", i.e., no one should be condemned unheard. The use of the word "may" in this rule cannot be taken to mean that it is optional with the Court to issue summons or not.[1]

Order 5, Rule 1—Note 1.

(1) See Gopal Gundappa Nayak v. Vishnu Krishna Naick, (1898) 22 Bom 971 (972) [After registration of plaint summons cannot be refused for default of plaintiff in producing original account-books].

It has been simply used in view of the alternative remedy (viz., of sending a letter instead of a summons) in R. 30, infra.

The necessity for serving a summons is dispensed with, however, where the defendant voluntarily appears at the presentation of the plaint and admits the plaintiff's claim and this is what the proviso to sub-Rule 1 enacts.[2] There is no time limit within which a summons to appear has to be issued.[3]

2. Contents of summons.—See appendix B, Form 1. The summons should show what claim the defendant is called upon to answer and on what date he is to be heard. It is not enough if he is made aware generally of the institution of a suit against him.[1]

3. Summons not necessary when defendant has appeared.—See Note 1.

An appearance by the defendant in an interlocutory application before the registration of a suit itself is no appearance within the meaning of the proviso.[1]

4. Signature in summons.—As to whether signature will include initials. See Notes to S. 2 (20).

5. Fresh Summons.—A Court, may, in its discretion, issue a fresh summons if and when necessary. See the undermentioned cases.[1]

6. "To appear and answer."—For the meaning of "appearance" See O. 17, R. 2; O. 9, R. 9 and O. 3, R. 1.

7. "Duly instituted."—See S. 27.

8. Summons to which place to be issued.—The summons should be taken out to the defendant at the place where he ordinarily or voluntarily resides or carries on business or works for gain; if the defendant has several places of residence and summons to one of such places is returned unserved, summons should be taken out to other places of residence, but it is not the duty of the plaintiff to take out summonses to the places where the defendant might have gone from his place of residence.[1] As to the definition of the words "reside" and "residence". See Notes 3 to 7, S. 20.

The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to issue and service of summons have been made applicable to proceedings under the following Local Acts:—The Burmah Land and Revenue Act, II of 1876, S. 54-A. The Lower Burmah Town and Village Lands Act, IV of 1898, S. 39; the Indian

1. Sufficient time.—It is not open to a plaintiff to obtain an ex parte decree before the returnable date mentioned in the summons.[1] A defendant is entitled to sufficient time to enable him to appear and answer in person or by pleader,[2] and Courts should carefully see that reasonable time is allowed to the defendant in all cases in order that the Courts themselves may not be made the instruments of fraud and injustice by means of those processes, the vigilant superintendence of the issue and the service of which, is one of the most important duties of the Courts.[3] Thus it has been held that a service in the afternoon of 27th January on an old woman of 65 to appear and answer in a Court some distance off on the morning of 29th January is not a due

1. Object of service of summons.—The object of all service other than substituted service to which other considerations apply is only to give notice to the party on whom it is made, so that he might be aware of and be able to resist the suit if he wishes to do so.[1] Where that has been done so that the Court might feel perfectly confident that service had reached him, everything is done that could be required.[2] The mere irregularity in the manner of service is, not necessarily a ground for setting aside the decree.[3]

2. "Resident within that jurisdiction."—For the purpose of summons residence is not synonymous with ownership "of property within the territorial limits of the Court". Thus a permanent absentee cannot be described as a resident in a place merely by virtue of ownership.[1] For the meaning of the words "reside" and "residence", see Notes 3-7 of S. 20.

3. "Unless the Court otherwise directs."—These words have been added to give the Court power to order service in any other way it thinks proper, e.g., by post.[1] See also the Report of the Special Committee wherein they say "increased facilities have been given for the service of processes to which further reference has been made in the notes on clauses. It is hoped that by the gradual introduction of service by post may be found a solution of one of the principal defects in our legal system".

4. Service by registered post.—See Note 2 to R. 10.

5. Proper Officer.—The Nazir is the proper officer of the Court to whom the summons is delivered for service and it is for him to return it to the Court if unserved.[1] But he can delegate the execution of a warrant to peons.[2] A service of summons is irregular if it is not made by the proper officer or by his subordinate.[3]

6. Service of summons outside jurisdiction.—Service of summons outside the jurisdiction of the Court issuing it without sending it to the Court having jurisdiction is irregular.[1]

LAHORE.

The following proviso should be added:—

"Provided that in any case if the plaintiff so wishes, the Court may serve the summons in the first instance by registered post (acknowledgment due) instead of in the mode of service laid down in this rule."

PATNA.

Add the following to rule 10:—

"(1) Provided that in any case the Court may, of its own motion, or on the application of the plaintiff, send the summons to the defendant by post in addition to the mode of service laid down in this rule. An acknowledgment purporting to be signed by the defendant or an endorsement by postal servant that the defendant refused to take delivery may be deemed by the Court issuing the summons to be prima facie proof of service."

Synopsis.

1. Mode of service.
2. Service by post.

1. Mode of service.—The Code prescribes three principle modes of serving a summons on a defendant.[1]

(1) Under this rule read with rules 12, 16 and 18 infra, i.e., by delivering or tendering a copy of the summons to the defendant personally or to his duly empowered agent and taking his signature in token of acknowledgment of such service. This is the mode of service that should normally be adopted unless it is unavoidable to do so.[2]

(2) Where the summons cannot be served in the above manner by reason of the fact that the defendant refuses to sign the acknowledgment of service or cannot be found or has no agent duly empowered to accept service, it should be affixed to the outer door or other conspicuous part of the defendant's residence under R. 17, infra.[3]

(3) Where the summons cannot be served in either of the above two modes, or there is reason to believe that the defendant is keeping out of the way for the purpose of avoiding service, the Court may order substituted service under R. 20, infra, i.e., by affixing a copy of the summons in the Court house and also in some conspicuous part of the defendant's last residence, or in such other manner as the Court thinks fit. This, however, unlike the other two modes of service must be done after obtaining the order of the Court therefor.

Besides the three modes of service prescribed by the Code, the Court may, in particular cases direct service of the summons by post. See Note 3 to R. 9 and the following note to this section.

2. Service by Post.—Although the Court may, in a particular case, direct that the summons should be sent by post, the normal mode of service is personal service.[1] Service by registered post is, at any time, a poor substitute for personal service; it is allowed to a litigant as a matter of convenience and very slight evidence is enough to displace the presumption of service raised by it.[1-a] Thus where a summons sent by post, was returned as "refused" by a person who was not shown to have been the defendant, it was held that it was not a good service.[2]

Under S. 27 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, where any Act, passed after 11*th March*, 1897, authorises or requires any document to be served by post, then unless a different intention appears, the service shall be deemed to have been effected, unless the contrary is proved, at the time, when a properly addressed and stamped letter containing the document, and sent by registered post would in the ordinary course of post reach the addressee. Where, therefore, a summons is sent by registered post as, e.g., under the provisions of R. 25 infra properly addressed and is returned endorsed "refused" the Court can treat the service as sufficient.[3] Section 27 of the General Clauses Act 1897 however, does not apply to service by post authorised by an Act passed before 11th March 1897. In cases, therefore, arising under the old Code it was held that where a summons sent by Registered post was returned as refused, the service could not be deemed to be sufficient.[4]

A summons cannot be sent by post to any place to which letters are not registered by a post office in India.[5]

Under the Proviso added to this rule by the Lahore High Court, service by Registered post may be ordered even in the first instance. But if the de-

1. Service on several defendants.—The proviso to the old section which contained rules relating to the mode of service on partners has been omitted in this section but has been re-enacted under O. 30, R. 3 of the Code.

When there are more defendants than one, service should be made on each one of them.[1] But in a suit against the principal debtor and surety, the omission of the creditor to effect a service of summons on the principal debtor, does not discharge the surety from his liability.[2]

O. 5, R.12.

Service to be on defendant in person when practicable or on his agent.

R. 12. [S. 75.] Wherever it is practicable, service shall be made on the defendant in person, unless he has an agent empowered to accept service, in which case service on such agent shall be sufficient.

O. 5, R. 12, Notes 1—3.

1. "Wherever it is practicable."—As a general rule the summons must be served on the defendant in person unless he has an agent empowered to accept service in which case it would be enough if it is served on him.[1] For that purpose the serving officer must make some substantial effort and proper enquiries to find out the person to be served in the place where he ordinarily resides or carries on business.[2] The mere affixing of the summons on the door without any such attempt is not sufficient.[3]

A person whose name does not correspond to the description, in the summons is justified in refusing it, but if A had posed as B, and had dealings with the plaintiff and if he is given summons addressed to B he knows it is for him, and consequently service in the name of B, is sufficient notice of the suit to A.[4] Courts can always correct bona fide mistakes, in the description of parties appearing in summonses, at the time of hearing, provided the opposite party was not mislead or prejudiced thereby.[5]

2. Service on minor.—There are no special provisions as to service on infants and therefore the same rules which apply to adults apply to minors also. There should be personal service or such other service as is prescribed by the Code.[1] Service on the guardian ad litem alone of the minor is not good.[2] Where the guardian was evading service but the notice was served on the minor, the former must be deemed to have received information and it was held the minor could not be allowed to plead that the service was irregular.[3]

3. Service on pardanashin lady.—When the summons has to be served upon a woman, who is not accustomed to appear in public, as for, e.g. a Pardanashin lady, personal service is not possible, and the summons may therefore be served on any adult male member of the family or on her agent empowered to receive summons.[1] If there is no agent so empowered, it can be affixed to the outer door of the house in which she ordinarily resides.[2]

4. Service on agent.—A service on the agent is valid only if he is empowered to accept service on behalf of the defendant. By R. 6 of O. 3, any person living within the jurisdiction of the Court may be appointed an agent to accept service of process, by instrument in writing signed by the principal.[1] Thus gumastas and servants[2] and managers[3] merely looking after the affairs of the defendant or holding general powers of attorney cannot accept sevrice, but a partner will be deemed an agent of the firm.[4] O. 5, R.12, Note 4.

R. 13. [S. 76.] (1) In a suit relating to any business or work against a person who does not reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court from which the summons is issued, service on any manager, or agent, who, at the time of service, personally carries on such business or work for such person within such limits, shall be deemed good service. O. 5, R.13, Note 1.

Synopsis.

1. Manager or agent personally carrying on business.

1. Manager or agent personally carrying on business.—In order that this rule may apply, two conditions are necessary to be satisfied.

A. The defendant residing without the jurisdiction of the Court must carry on business or work within jurisdiction through a manager or agent, and

B. the suit must relate to such business or work that is, business or work either actually itself carried on by the agent or manager, or forming part of the business, in the sense of a connected course of transactions to the management of which, he has been duly appointed.[1]

The manager or agent contemplated by the rule is one who has an initiative and independent discretion, though possibly subject to general orders

A service on the duly appointed agent or manager as contemplated by this rule is valid service whether the fact of service is actually communicated to the principal or not.[6] In order that a service on an agent of foreign corporation may be valid, the agent must have power to enter into contracts on behalf of such corporation.[7]

Local Amendments.

ALLAHABAD.—

For the words "Where in any suit the defendant cannot be found" read "When the defendant is absent or cannot be personally served".

BENGAL.—

Cancel Rule 15 and substitute therefor the following:—

"15. Where in any suit the defendant is absent from his residence at the time when service is sought to be effected on him thereat and there is no likelihood of his being found thereat within a reasonable time, then unless he has an agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, service may be made on any adult male member of the family of the defendant who is residing with him:

Provided that where such adult male member has an interest in the suit and such interest is adverse to that of the defendant, a summons so served shall be deemed for the purposes of the third column of Article 164 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act, 1908, not to have been duly served.

Explanation.—A servant is not a member of the family within the meaning of this rule."

LAHORE.— .. ..

In Rule 15, after the words "where in any suit the defendant cannot be found" the following words were inserted:—

"or is absent from his residence."

MADRAS.—

In Rule 15 of Order 5, delete the words "the defendant cannot be found" and in lieu thereof insert the words "the defendant is absent".

NAGPUR.—

In Rule 15, substitute the words "when the defendant is absent or cannot be personally served" for the words "where in any suit the defendant cannot be found".

OUDH.—

Order 5, Rule 15.—In Oudh for the words "where in . . . . found", substitute "where a summons has been issued to a defendant on the institution of a suit and he is absent from the address stated in the summons."

RANGOON.—

For the words "Where in any suit the defendant cannot be found" in the first line of Rule 15, substitute the words "Where the defendant is absent".

Omit the word "male" between the word "adult" and the word "member" in the third line of Rule 15.

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.
2. "Adult male member of the family."
3. Service on servant not valid—Explanation.

Cannot be found. See Note 1.

1. Scope of the rule.—It is only when the defendant cannot be found and has no agent empowered to accept service on his behalf that service may be made on any adult member of his family. It cannot be said that the defendant

O. 5, R.15, Notes 1—3.

"cannot be found" when it appears that he was not at home or had left for a particular place when the process server went to effect service on him.[1] It is the duty of the process server to take pains to find out the person to be served[2] and for this purpose he should make enquiries not only of the relations of the defendant but also of the neighbours.[3] In the absence of such an attempt at personal service on the defendant, the service on a member of the family is not sufficient.[4]

2. "Adult male member of the family."—A person above the age of 16 years has been held to be an "adult" within the meaning of this section.[1] The service must be on an adult male member of the family. The law does not recognise service on any female members of the defendant's family.[2]

Where service was effected on an adult male member of the family under R. 15 and the defendant was in communication with his family members, it was held that the service was sufficient.[3]

3. Service on servant not valid—Explanation.—As the explanation shows, a servant is not a member of the family. A service on a servant therefore is not sufficient.[1] A service on a munim is similarly not one, on a member of the family and is not valid.[2]

O. 5, R.16, Note 1.

R. 16. [S. 79.] Where the serving officer delivers or tenders a copy of the summons to the defendant personally, or to an agent or other person on his behalf, he shall require the signature of the person to whom the copy is so delivered or tendered to an acknowledgment of service endorsed on the original summons.

(a) On the defendant in person. O. 5, R. 16, Notes 1—2.

(b) On the defendant's duly appointed agent.

(c) Upon any other person on behalf of the defendant.

The third class of service is contemplated by the Law only when the party cannot himself be found.[1]

The words "other person on his behalf" can, according to context, only mean persons as contemplated by the preceding Rules 13 to 15.

2. "Shall require the signature".—As far as possible the officer serving the process should carry out the service in one of the modes prescribed by this rule and Rule 17 infra.[1] In other words, the serving officer delivering or tendering a copy of the summons should require the person served to sign an acknowledgment of service under this rule, and on his refusal to do so, should affix a copy of the summons to the outer door or other conspicuous part of his residence as prescribed by Rule 17.[1-a] Where a copy of the summons is delivered to the defendant but the latter refuses to sign the acknowledgment of service and the process-server does not affix the copy as per Rule 17, there is a conflict of opinion as to whether the defendant can be taken to have been validly served. The High Court of Madras,[2] Patna[2-a] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur[3] hold that the service is complete under O. 5, R. 10, when it is tendered to the defendant, and that the omission to obtain the signature is a mere irregularity not affecting the validity of service. The High Court of Bombay,[4] and Chief Court of Punjab[5] have, on the other hand, held that it is not a valid service. The High Court of Patna has also held[6] that where no copy of the summons is retained by the defendant, though tendered to him, and he refuses to sign an acknowledgment, the service is not sufficient unless the affixture is made under Rule 17.

A refusal to receive the summons or sign an acknowledgment of service is not an offence under S. 173 or 180 of the Indian Penal Code.[7]

R. 17. [S. 80.] Where the defendant or his agent or such other person as aforesaid refuses to sign the acknowledgment, [3] or where the serving officer, after using all due and reasonable diligence,[5] cannot find the defendant, [4] and there is no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, nor any other person on whom service can be made, the serving officer shall affix [7] a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain, [9] and shall then return [11] the original to the Court from which it was issued, with a report endorsed thereon or annexed thereto stating that he has so affixed the copy, the circumstances under which he did so, and the name and address of the person (if any) by whom the house was identified and in whose presence the copy was affixed.

Procedure when defendant refuses to accept service, or cannot be found.

Local Amendment.

BENGAL.—

Cancel Rule 17 and substitute therefor the following:—

"17. Where the defendant or his agent or such other person as aforesaid refuses to sign the acknowledgment, or where the defendant is absent from his residence at the time when service is sought to be effected on him thereat and there is no likelihood of his being found thereat within a reasonable time and there is no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, nor any other person upon whom service can be made, the serving officer shall affix a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain, and shall then return the original to the Court from which it was issued, with a report endorsed thereon or annexed thereto stating that he has so affixed the copy, the circumstances under which he did so, and the name and address of the person (if any) by whom the house was identified and in whose presence the copy was affixed."

Synopsis.

1. Legislative changes.
2. Scope of the section.
3. Refusal to sign acknowledgment.
4. "Where defendant cannot be found."
5. After using all due and reasonable diligence.
6. Proof of service. See O. 5, R. 19.
7. Affixture.
8. Service on minor. See O. 5, R. 12.
9. "Resides or carries on business or personally works for gain."
10. Temporary residence of defendant. See Notes 4 and 5 above.
11. Return of service.

1. Legislative changes.—

1. The words "after using all due and reasonable diligence" are new. See Note 5 below.
2. The words "or on some other conspicuous part" have been added to provide for the contingency of the house having no outer door.

3. The words "or carries on business or personally works for gain" have been added to remove a doubt as to whether an affixture of the summons to the outer door of the defendant's place of business was a valid service.[1] O. 5, R. 17, Notes 1—4.

4. The words "and the name and address of the person (if any) by whom the house was identified and in whose presence the copy was affixed" have been newly added. See Note 11.

2. Scope of the rule.—This rule enacts the second of the three modes of service referred to in Note 1 to O. 5, R. 10, and provides that it should be resorted to when the first of the said modes of service, namely, that prescribed in Rr. 10, 12 and 16, is not possible. The rule is of a highly penal nature and must be strictly complied with in order to give validity to the service purporting to be effected thereunder.[1]

This rule applies also to notices served under S. 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act[2] and to notices under the Oudh Rent Act.[3]

3. Refusal to sign acknowledgment.—When a summons was offered to the defendant with an intimation of its purport, but the defendant without accepting it, went into his house and shut himself up, and the process-server affixed the summons on the outer door of the defendant's house, it was held, that it was due service.[1] Where the defendant or his agent or other persons referred to in Rr. 13 to 16, supra refuse to sign the acknowledgment and the service is effected by affixture to the outer door of the defendant's dwelling, the Court is perfectly justified in treating the service as good.[2]

Where the summons is tendered or delivered to the defendant but he refuses to sign the acknwledgment there is a conflict of opinion on the question whether it is a valid service irrespective of the fact that the affixture has or has not been made under this rule. See Note 2 to R. 16 of O. 5.

4. "Where the defendant cannot be found".—The affixture of summons will be a valid service under this rule only where, either

1. the defendant or his agent or such other person as is mentioned in Rr. 13 to 15 refuses to sign the acknowledgment, or
2. The serving officer, after using all due and reasonable diligence, cannot find the defendant and there is no agent or other person on whom the service can be made.

O. 5, R. 17, Notes 4—5.

A person cannot be said to be "not found" within the meaning of this rule merely by reason of his being temporarily absent at another place.[1] The serving officer, before he can take advantage of the provisions of this rule must use all due and reasonable diligence to find the defendant.[2] He must attend the right place and at a time when he may reasonably expect the defendant to be present; if he fails to find the defendant then, he must take reasonable steps to discover where the defendant is likely to be.[3]

But where, either by reason of the custom of the country or for some other reason it is impossible for the serving officer to obtain access to the person to be served, the case will be covered by the description "where the defendant cannot be found by the serving officer."[4] Thus a service by affixture will be good if the defendant is keeping out of the way to avoid service[5] or if he shuts himself up in his house and does not come out for a reasonable time[6] or where the defendant is a purdanashin lady who is not able to accept service personally and has no agent or other person to accept service on her behalf[7] or where the defendant is lying sick and the serving officer cannot get access to him.[8]

The words "where the defendant cannot be found by the serving officer" will also cover a case where the absence of the defendant is for an indefinite period. The serving officer is not bound to wait indefinitely for the defendant in such a case and will be justified in making the affixture under this rule.[9]

which insisted on the necessity of a bona fide attempt at personal service.[1] The serving officer will not be deemed to have exercised due and reasonable diligence unless he has made a real and substantial effort after proper inquiries, to find the defendant.[1-a] He must attend at the right place and time at which he may expect to find the defendant, and, if he is absent, must make reasonable inquiries and take steps to discover where he is.[2] In Cohen v. Nursing Dass, I. L. R. (1892) 19 Cal. 201. Sir Comer Petheram, C. J., observed as follows:—

"It is true you may go to a man's house and not find him, but that is not attempting to find him. You should go to his house, make inquiries and, if necessary, follow him. You should make inquiries to find out when he is likely to be at home and go to the house at a time when he can be found. Before service like this can be effected, it must be shown that proper efforts have been made to find out when and where the defendant is likely to be found—not, as seems to be done in this country, to go to his house in a perfunctory way, and, because he has not been found there, to affix a copy of the summons to the outer door of his house."

If the defendant has two residences, inquiries must be made at both the places.[2-a] As has already been seen in Note 4, a mere temporary absence will not justify affixture[3] even though the defendant had previously refused to accept service.[4] Where the process-server, not finding the defendant at his residence tendered the summons to his adult son who refused it and, without making any further inquiry of the son as to where the defendant was affixed the summons to the outer door of the residence it was held that the service was not proper.[5]

It has been held in the undermentioned cases[6] that the applicability of the words "after using all due and reasonable diligence" is specially restricted to the case where there is no agent empowered to accept service nor any other person on whom the service can be made, and that, where there is such a person, a diligent effort need not be made to effect personal service. It has also been held therein even if the agent or other person refuses the summons, it is still necessary to show that the defendant "cannot be found." It is submitted that this latter view is not correct in as much as the section states "where the defendant or his agent or such other person aforesaid refuses to sign the

6. Proof of service.—See Order 5, Rule 19.

7. Affixture.—As to the conditions under which alone an affixture could be made under this rule see Notes 4 and 5 above. The affixture should be made on the outer door or other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain.[1] Where the serving officer finds that the defendant never resided in the village, he must return the summons unserved. Affixture in such a case is absolutely useless.[1-a] Similarly an affixture to the outer door of a house in which the defendant was actually found but which was not his ordinary place of residence is not sufficient.[2] Again the rule requires that there should be actual affixture of the summons. Merely leaving a copy of the summons on the teapoy of the defendant's house is insufficient.[3]

9. "Resides or carries on business or permanently works for gain."—See S. 20.

10. Temporary residence of defendant.—See Notes 4 and 5 above.

11. Return of service.—The law requires that the action of the person charged with the service of summons should be set out in full and must be supported by an affidavit.[1] The return must show that the defendant could not be found, that there was no other person on whom service could be made, that the summons was affixed on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house and that the house was one in which the defendant ordinarily resided or carried on business or personally worked for gain.[2] A return that the defendant was not in the village[3] or that the summons was served on the defendant's paternal uncle who was a member of a joint family[4] was held to be defective in the absence of an endorsement that the defendant could not be found So also a report that "respondent was not found" was held to be not good as it did not state that any effort or inquiry was made to find him.[5] The report must say that it was affixed to the dwelling house.[6] It must also

Insert the following as Rule 18-A:—

18-A. A District Judge, within the meaning of the Madras Civil Courts Act, 1873, may delegate to the Chief Ministerial Officer of the District Court the power to order the issue of fresh summons to a defendant when the return on the previous summons is to the effect that the defendant was not served and the plaintiff does not object to the issue of fresh summons within seven days after the return has been notified on the notice board."

Chief Ministerial Officer, District Courts, may be empowered to order issue of fresh summons.

The service of a summons or of a notice upon a person is a very important step and the law very properly requires that the action of the person charged with the service of such notice or summons should be set out in full and be supported by his affidavit. Until this has been done the summons cannot be considered to have been duly served.[1]

2. Person identifying defendant.—It is not incumbent on a party to provide an identifier for the purpose of identifying the person served. The identifier can be a person in the village knowing the defendant.[1]

3. Presumption as to service.—There is a presumption of service as stated in the process server's report, and the burden lies on the party questioning it, to show that the return is incorrect.[1] Similarly when there is any entry in the order sheet of the Court, that summons has been served, there is no presumption that such entry is false and the party questioning it, has to show that it is not correct.[2]

It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that the report of the serving officer that a summons was served on a person is not evidence as to service unless the person is examined and the service is proved.[3] But where summons is sent under Rules 24, 26, 27 and 28, the return is evidence. See Rules 26 and 30, infra.

4. Revision.—The mere fact that lower Courts are wrong on the question of law relating to service of summons is not enough for the High Court to interfere in revision under S. 115. But in cases of patent and extreme hardship S. 15 of the Charter Act, 1861 (now) Government of India Act, 1915, S. 107) can be invoked.

may, if it has been so verified, examine the serving officer, on oath, or cause him to be so examined by another Court, touching his proceedings, and may make such further inquiry in the matter as it thinks fit; and shall either declare that the summons has been duly served or order such service as it thinks fit.''

Insert the following after Rule 19:—

''19-A. A declaration made and subscribed by a serving officer shall be received as evidence of the facts as to the service or attempted service of the summons.''

Synopsis.

1. "Examine on oath."
2. "Shall declare that the summons has been duly served."
3. "Or order such service as it thinks fit."
4. Proof of service.

1. ''Examine on oath''.—If the return is not verified by the affidavit of the serving officer, the Court is bound to examine him before deciding as to the sufficiency of service; and the omission to do so is a material irregularity.[1] It cannot be said that there is due service in such a case.[2]

2. ''Shall declare that the summons has been duly served''.—The words ''duly served'' in this Rule mean served in such a manner as to give the defendant information of the proceedings against him.[1] Where therefore it appears from the return of the serving officer that there is no likelihood that the summons will come to the defendant's knowledge in due time or a probability that it will not so come to his knowledge, the Court should not declare the summons as duly served.[2] It has been held by the High Court of Bombay and by the Chief Court of Oudh that the Code in the matter of service of summons does not take into account the female members of the defendant's family and does not rely upon the presumption that they will take steps to inform the defendant of what takes place in his absence.[3] The High Court of Madras and Calcutta have, on the other hand held, that an affixture of notice to the knowledge of the wife of the defendant is sufficient service under the law.[4]

Before the Court decides that there has been due service it must be satisfied that the provisions of R. 17 were really complied with, namely that the serving officer had used all due and reasonable diligence to find the defendant before affixing the summons[5] or that the defendant was keeping out of the way for purposes of avoiding service[6] or that he refused service.

O. 5, R. 19, Notes 2—4.

There is a difference of opinion as to whether the declaration of due service under this rule should be express. In the undermentioned cases[7] the High Court of Madras has held that an express order is necessary. The High Court of Allahabad also seems to take the same view.[8] In two other cases, however, the High Court of Madras held that the declaration may be an implied one, e.g., where the Court orders attachment on receipt of the return by the process server of the notice.[9] It is submitted that the latter view is not correct. The provision for examination of the serving officer and for further inquiry in the absence of an affidavit by the serving officer, show clearly that the spirit of the section demands an express order.

The order should be made as early as possible after the summons is returned, and failure to pass such an order is not a mere irregularity.[10] An ex parte decree passed without a declaration of due service is liable to be set aside.[11] Where the summons is returned unserved, the Court should pass subsequent orders, not vaguely but very clearly, stating the reason for non-service.[12]

Where summons is sent by one Court to another Court for service, the serving Court is the proper one to declare as to the propriety of the service.[13] See also Notes to R. 23, infra.

3. "Or order such service as it thinks fit."—Even where the provisions of Rule 17 have been technically complied with, the Court may order fresh summons to another address or order service in another mode where it considers that the defendant could not get knowledge of the suit, by the service effected. In Khiroda Sundari Dasi v. Nabin Chandra Saha.[1] The High Court of Calcutta observed as follows:—

"It is open to the Court even where there has been a technical compliance with the provisions of Rule 17 to order service in another mode if the Court thinks fit to do so in the interests of justice. The Court may in a case of this description, direct the issue of summons to purdanashin ladies by means of notice sent by registered post, so that the cover may, in due course, reach the lady herself."

4. Proof of service.—The best proof of service is the return which the serving officer is bound to send to the Court and which must contain all that he has done in the matter of effecting service.[1] Where the fact of service is denied it is for the party alleging service to prove it.[2] As to the admissi-

OUDH.—

Between Rules 20 and 21, insert the following:—

"20-A. (1) Where the defendant resides in British India outside the province of Oudh or within the limits of headquarters town of a district in the province, a summons may be served on him by registered post, and in this case, where an acknowledgment purporting to be signed by the defendant or an endorsement by a postal servant that the defendant refused service has been received, the process shall, unless the contrary is proved, be deemed to have been served,

(2) Where the registered address of the defendant or opposite party, as defined in Order 8, Rule 11, is within the limits of a headquarters, town or of a municipality of India (including Burma) or Ceylon, a notice, summons or other process may be served on him at that address by registered post and such service shall be deemed to be as effectual as if the notice or process had been personally served."

RANGOON.—

After Rule 20, the following shall be inserted as Rule 20-A, namely:—

"20-A. (1) Every plaintiff, appellant or applicant on presenting or on entering an appearance to prosecute a plaint, memorandum of appeal, or originating petition or application, shall at the same time file in Court a proceeding stating his address for service.

O. 5, R. 20, Note 1.

(2) Every defendant or respondent who intends to appear and defend any suit, appeal, or originating petition or application shall on or before the date fixed for his appearance in the summons or notice served on him file in Court a proceeding stating his address for service.

(3) Such address for service shall be within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit, appeal, or petition or application is filed, or of the District Court within whose jurisdiction the party ordinarily resides.

(4) Where any party fails to file an address for service, as required by sub-Rule (1) or sub-Rule (2), he shall, if a plaintiff, appellant or applicant, be liable to have his suit, appeal, petition or application, dismissed for want of prosecution, and, if a defendant or respondent, be liable to have his defence, if any, struck out and to be placed in the same position as if he had not defended. Any party may apply for such an order against an opposite party, and the Court may on such application make such order as it thinks just.

(5) Where a party is not found at the address given by him for service, and no agent or adult member of his family on whom a notice or process can be served is found at the address, a copy of the notice or process shall be affixed on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house or place which has been given as the address for service; and such service shall be deemed to be as effectual as if the notice or process had been personally served on the party.

(6) Where a party is represented by an advocate or pleader, notices or processes for service on him shall be served in the manner prescribed by Order 3, Rule 5, unless the Court directs service at the address for service given by such party.

(7) A party who desires to change the address for service given by him under sub-Rule (1) or sub-Rule (2) shall present a verified petition to that effect, and the Court may direct the amendment of the record accordingly. Notice of every such petition shall be given to all other parties to the proceedings.

(8) Nothing in this rule shall prevent the Court from directing the service of a notice or process in any other manner if it thinks fit to do so."

Service of process on unknown person. See Note 4, Pt. (3).

1. Scope of the Rule.—This rule enacts the third of three modes of service prescribed by the Code and referred to in Note 1 to O. 5, R. 10, and is called substituted service. It is to be adopted where there is reason to believe that the defendant is keeping out of the way for the purpose of evading service or that for some other reason the summons cannot be served in the ordinary way. But it should not be used in a way which is unbusinesslike or ridiculous, e.g., where substituted service is made by affixture to the door of the Court-house by way of serving the defendant admitted on all hands to be in Natal, South Africa.[1]

The substituted service under this rule, unlike the two other modes of service, can only be taken by order of the Court to that effect.[2] And it could be ordered only in cases where a personal service could have been effected if there were no difficulties in the way.[2-a] Thus a foreign sovereign over whom the Courts have no jurisdiction cannot be ordered to be served by substitution under this rule.[3]

O. 5, R.20, Notes 1—2.

It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad[4] that a notice to show cause why a person should not be appointed guardian of an infant, cannot be served by substituted service under this rule.

The procedure laid down by this rule will also be applicable to the service of notice in appeals.[5]

2. "Where the Court is satisfied".—Before ordering substituted service the Court should be satisfied that the conditions on which alone it can be ordered exist, namely, that the defendant is keeping out of the way to avoid service[1] or that for any other reason, service cannot be effected in the ordinary way.[2] The mere statement of the plaintiff that he cannot ascertain the address of the defendant without proof of reasonable efforts having been made to find out his whereabouts, is not enough to enable the Court to pass an order for substituted service.[3] Where, however, the plaintiff has done his best to get the defendant served personally and fails[4] and the Court is satisfied from the affidavit of the serving officer that the defendant is purposely evading service[5] an order for substituted service can properly be made.

The non-fulfilment of either condition necessary before an order under this rule can be passed is a material irregularity[6] and an ex parte decree passed on such service being accepted as sufficient, will be set aside on an application under O. 9, R. 13.[7]

The advisability of effecting substituted service is a matter primarily for the trial Court and the appellate Court has no jurisdiction to consider whether the order of the trial Court is based on sufficient grounds. It has only to see whether the order issued is according to Law and whether the trial Court was satisfied that the conditions of this rule were fulfilled.[8]

O. 5, R. 20, Notes 3—6.

3. Evasion of service by the defendant.—As to when the defendant must be deemed to be keeping out of the way has to be determined according to the circumstances of each case.[1] Mere temporary absence on the part of the defendant does not amount to evasion.[2] Where the plaintiff knew all along that the defendant had left a certain place two or three years before the suit, and he further knew that the defendant had left his brother in that place and was in communication with him, it cannot be said that there has been an evasion of service by the defendant.[3] But where a man gets away from the serving officer and shuts himself up with the obvious intentions of not allowing the process-server to hold any communication with him, it clearly amounts to evasion.[4]

4. Non-possibility of service for other reasons.—Even though the defendant is not keeping out of the way, the Court has got power to order substituted service if it is satisfied that for any other reason the summons cannot be served in the ordinary manner.[1] Thus where by the custom in India the respondent a Hindu woman of rank could not be served personally the judicial committee ordered service under this rule on her Dewan.[2] So also in the case of unascertained persons or persons who cannot be traced and it cannot be ascertained whether they are alive or dead substituted service can be ordered. Thus it has been held where one of the co-owners is missing, the only reasonable course is to make him and his heirs parties and take out substituted service.[3]

5. Mode of effecting substituted service.—Service under this rule is effected by affixing a copy of the summons in the Notice Board of the Court-house, by affixing another copy to the outer door of the house in which the defendant was known to have last resided and by advertising in such of the newspapers as the Court may direct.[1] It has been held by the High Court of Lahore that the service by affixture will be bad unless a copy of the plaint is also affixed along with the summons.[2] The fact that a copy of the summons was affixed to a tree reasonably near the defendant's hut would not invalidate the service.[3]

6. "Shall fix such time"—Sub-Rule (3).—Under this rule the Court is bound to fix a time for the appearance of the defendant and it should see that ample and reasonable time is allowed for notice to come to the knowledge of the person concerned.[1] Thus, the publication of a notice in newspaper in

But the Courts generally satisfy themselves by the affidavit or examination of the affixing officer and the production of the newspaper in which the notice was published.

8. Substituted service is as effective as personal service.—Sub-Rule (2) of this rule provides that service substituted by order of the Court shall be as effectual as personal service.[1] The words "as effectual" mean "as effectual for the purpose of enabling the Court to proceed with the suit".[2]

Where service has been effected under this rule and an ex parte decree is passed the defendant is entitled to show that the circumstances justifying the order for such service did not exist, e.g., he can show that he was not keeping out of the way for the purpose of avoiding service.[3] The fact that the return of the summons was destroyed will be no ground for refusing to set aside an ex parte decree.[4]

There is a conflict of opinion as to whether substituted service under this rule "is due service", within the meaning of Art. 164 of the Limitation Act and whether time for an application to set aside an ex parte decree passed after such service, runs from the date of the decree or from the date of the defendants knowledge of the decree. A Full Bench of the High Court of Allahabad[5] has held that substituted service does not necessarily amount to "due service" in all cases, and that the question whether it amounts to due service is to be considered by the Court to which an application has been made for setting aside an ex parte decree, having regard to all the circumstances of the case such as the place where the defendant was when the summons was issued to him, the manner of service, and the probability or otherwise of his having had knowledge thereof. The High Court of Lahore[6] and the Chief Court of Oudh[7] have, on the other hand, held that substituted service is "due service" even though it does not come to the knowledge of the defendant. In the undermentioned cases[8] the High Court of Madras held the same view as that of the High Court of Lahore. In later cases[9] however, the same High Court has dissented from its former view and has held that substituted service is not necessarily "due service" within Art. 164 of the Limitation Act, but that it may or may not amount due service according as the circumstances necessary for its order do, or do not exist and that the defendant should be given an opportunity to show that such justifying circumstances did not exist.

1. Service of summons outside jurisdiction.—As a rule a Court cannot serve its own process outside its jurisdiction.[1] Under this rule a summons against a defendant residing within the jurisdiction of another Court should be sent to that Court by one of the officers of the Court issuing the summons, or by post, and it is the duty of the Court so receiving the summons to serve it on the defendant. See R. 23. The service of summons effected outside the jurisdiction of the Court issuing it, and without any order of the Court having jurisdiction, is irregular.[2]

RANGOON.

The following shall be Order 5, Rule 23-A:—

"23-A.—(1) Before re-transmitting a summons received from another Court for service, the Court shall either take down the deposition of the peon serving the summons as to the time when, and the manner in which the summons was served; or cause the peon to make an affidavit before the bailiff, if the bailiff has been empowered to administer oaths; and shall transmit the same, together with the summons, to the Court whence the summons originally issued. In the case of processes received from other provinces the deposition or affidavit of the peon serving the summons, if not recorded in English, shall be translated into English, before the summons is returned to the issuing Court.

(2) In the case of processes received from India, if the person on whom the summons is to be served is not personally known to the process-server an affidavit or deposition by the person, who pointed out to the process-server the said person or his ordinary residence or place of business shall also be attached to the summons.

(3) When a process is forwarded for service by one Court in Burma to another Court in Burma and when the person on whom the process is to be served is not personally known to the process-server the case, in connection with which the process was issued, shall not be heard ex parte without an affidavit or deposition of some person who pointed out to the process-server the person to be served or his ordinary residence. The onus shall be upon the person at whose instance the summons is issued, either himself or by an agent, to point out to the process-server the person on whom the process is to be served or his ordinary residence or place of business.

(4) When the summons has been returned by the process-server under Rule 17, a declaration of due service or of failure to serve shall be recorded in Form, (Civil) 47, and sent with the summons to the Court by which it was issued."

Synopsis.

1. Sufficiency of service. 2. Form of return.

1. Sufficiency of service.—There is a conflict of opinion as to whether the Court to which the summons has been transmitted for the service has power to declare as to the sufficiency of service and the effect of such a declaration on the powers of the transmitting Court. According to the High Court of Calcutta, S. 85 (O. 5, R. 23), does not require the Court which served the summons, to make a return to the Court from which it issued touching the sufficiency of service. The duty of the serving Court according to the Calcutta view is to proceed on receipt of the summons, as if it had itself issued it, and then to return it, with the record, if any, framed under this rule, to the Court which issued it. It then devolves upon the Court issuing the summons to determine upon the sufficiency of service before proceeding to try the suit.[1] The Allahabad[2] and Bombay[3] High Courts as well as the Chief Courts of Oudh[4] and Burma[5] hold on the other hand that the last sentence of R. 19 enables the serving Court also to make a declaration as to sufficiency of service as that Court is in the best position to decide whether the process has been duly served or not, and that such a declaration raises a strong presumption of due and proper service. But this presumption obtains only donee probetur contrarium, and there may now and then occur cases, where there is something in the return distinctly negativing that presumption. Such occasions are of course rare and on those occasions, the Court issuing the process should not interfere unless it be on strong and good evidence. The certificate of return must, however, be signed by the Judge himself and not by the munsarim.[6] O. 5, R. 23, Notes 1—2.

2. Scope and object of the Rule.—A special bailiff cannot be sent to execute a civil process in a foreign territory.[1] This rule provides for the service of summons in a foreign territory through a political agent or Court. Such summons may be sent direct by the Court and not necessarily through the District Judge[2] A Court is not bound to proceed under this rule but can proceed under Rule 25 even where this rule applies.[3]

As no resident of a foreign territory can be compelled to appear before a British Indian Tribunal, service according to this rule is unnecessary if a mere notification of the proceedings is valid under the law of the tribunal.[4]

1. Amendments after 1908.—By the Repealing and Amending Act 1927 (Act X of 1927) the words "or airman" were inserted after the word "soldier".

2. Service on Soldiers.—When a summons is sent to a Commanding Officer for service on a soldier under him, he is bound to cause the summons to be served upon him.[1] He cannot refuse to have the same served, on the ground that under S. 144 of the Army Act of 1881 (44 and 45 Vict.) the soldier was entitled to protection, the debt sued upon, being less than £30.[2]

ORDER VI.

PLEADINGS GENERALLY.

R. 1. [New] "Pleading" shall mean plaint or written statement.

Pleading.

[Cf. Jud. Act, 1873, S. 100.]

Synopsis.

1. Scope and object of the order.
2. Purpose of pleading.
3. Counter-claim by defendant. See O. 8, R. 6.

English system of pleadings. See Note 1.

1. Scope and object of the order.—The whole of this order except Rules 14 and 15 is new and has been based upon the system of pleading introduced by the Judicature Act in England which is generally admitted to be the best form of pleading in Civil suits. The object of introducing this order is, as is observed by the Select Committee in their Statement of Objects and Reasons that "it is most necessary that litigants in this country should come to trial with all issues clearly defined, and that cases should not be expanded or grounds shifted without reference to the true facts." In their notes on clauses, the Select Committee also observe that they have, however, endeavoured to modify the rigour of the English rules by providing in accordance with S. 55 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, that the Court may, notwithstanding the absence of a specific denial, require any fact to be proved by the party who relies upon it. This modification of the rigour of the English rules gives effect to the view that had been taken under the old Code that the strict rule that averments not traversed must be taken to be admitted is not applicable to India.[1]

"Pleading" means plaint or written statement. Thus an application to sue as a pauper is not a pleading in as much as it becomes a plaint only after it is granted.[2] Similarly a statement by a pleader[3] or a petition for leave to execute the decree[4] is not a pleading. A defendant's pleading is the written statement. A plaintiff's pleading may be either a plaint or a written statement. Thus where the defendant in his written statement pleads a set off, the plaintiff can file a written statement in answer thereto, under O. 8, R. 8. The parties may, subsequent to the written statement of the defendants, also file written statements or additional written statements, by leave of the Court or under orders of the Court, under O. 8, R. 9.

2. Purpose of pleading.—The object of pleadings is to narrow the parties to definite issues and to diminish expense and delay (specially as regards the amount of testimony required on either side at the hearing.[1] In Sayad

Muhammad v. Fatteh Muhammad[2] Lord Halsbury delivering the opinion of the Privy Council observed "Whatever system of pleading may exist, the sole object of it is that each side may be fully alive to the questions that are about to be argued in order that they may have an opportunity of bringing forward such evidence as may be appropriate to the issues."

R. 2. [New] Every pleading shall contain, and contain only, a statement in a concise form of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence, as the case may be, but not the evidence by which they are to be proved, and shall, when necessary, be divided into paragraphs, numbered consecutively. Dates, sums and numbers shall be expressed in figures.

Pleading to state material facts and not evidence.

[Cf. S. 114, 1882.]. [R. S. C. O. 19, R. 4.]

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.
2. Pleadings must state only facts and not law.
3. The facts stated must be material facts.
4. Facts to anticipate opponents' answer, not to be pleaded.
5. Alternative and inconsistent allegations.
6. Matters affecting damages.
7. Pleadings should not state the evidence by which the facts are to be proved.
8. The facts should be stated in a concise form.
9. Variance between pleading and proof.
10. Construction of pleadings.

Facts not material at the stage of the pleading. See Note 4, Pts. (1) to (3). General and fundamental rules of pleading and special applications thereof. See Note 1.

Wilfully false pleadings—Effect. See Rule 15, Note 7, Pts. (2) to (4).

1. Scope of the Rule.—This is the main rule laying down the fundamental principles of pleading. It lays down:—

1. Affirmatively, that a pleading shall contain and contain only, material facts on which the party pleading relies.
2. Negatively, that it shall not contain facts which are only evidence by which such material facts are to be proved.

The other rules in this order are all special applications of the general rule laid down in this rule. It will here be convenient to summarise and refer to the other rules as to what the pleadings should or should not contain.

1. All necessary particulars must be stated in the pleadings (O. 6, Rr. 4 and 5).

2. The performance of conditions precedent need not be alleged but the non-performance of such conditions, if relied on, must be pleaded (O. 6, R. 6).

3. No pleading shall, except by way of amendment, raise any new ground of claim or allege any fact inconsistent with previous pleadings of the party pleading the same (O. 6, R. 7).

4. A bare denial of a contract alleged by the opposite party shall not be construed as a denial of the legality or sufficiency in law of such contract (O. 6, R. 8).

5. Documents need not be set out at length unless the precise words are material (O. 6, R. 9).

6. Conditions of the mind such as malice, knowledge etc., may be alleged as a fact without setting out the circumstances from which the same is to be implied (O. 6, R. 10).

7. Notice may be alleged as a fact without setting out the form, or the precise terms of such notice, or the circumstances from which it is to be inferred (O. 6, R. 11).

8. Implied contracts or relations between persons may be alleged as a fact and the series of letters, conversations or circumstances from which the contracts are to be inferred, need only be set out generally and not in detail (O. 6, R. 12).

9. Facts which the law presumes in a party's favour, or as to which the burden of proof lies on the other side need not be pleaded unless first denied (O. 6, R. 13).

2. Pleadings must state only facts and not law.—A pleading must state only facts and not law.[1] The reason is that it is for the Court itself to find out and examine all pleas of law that may apply to the facts,[2] and the parties can urge them at any time before judgment is pronounced.[3] It is not enough to plead merely that a right or liability exists, or that an act was unlawful or wrongful, or that the defendant is guilty of negligence,[4] or that the plaintiff is entitled as the heir-at-law to certain properties,[5] or that there was a donatio mortis causa.[6] The facts which establish these pleas must be stated in each case. But it is not necessary to state the legal effect of the facts stated.[7] Nor is it necessary to reply to a plea of limitation that "the statute does not apply" or "that the case has been taken out of the statute."[8]

O. 6, R. 2, Notes 2—3.

If a party seeks to oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court he must allege and prove facts which oust such jurisdiction.[9] If he sues for recovery of land, he must state the nature and particulars of his title.[10] In regard to an allegation that the defendant did an act "wrongfully, unlawfully and improperly" or "without any justification therefor or right so to do" without setting out the facts from which such conduct is to be inferred it was said "these epithets under the present system of pleading are useless and redundant. They add nothing whatever to the plaintiff's case. They are merely now epithets of abuse. They were formerly in declarations essential, because under that form of pleading, legal rights were stated for facts; but facts alone are stated now."[11]

3. The facts stated must be material facts.—The words "material facts" mean:

1. All facts upon which the plaintiff's cause of action or the defendant's defence depends; in other words all, those facts which must be proved in order to establish the existence of a cause of action or defence;[1] and

2. All facts which, though not necessary to establish the cause of action or defence, but which the party pleading them is entitled to prove at the trial are also material facts. Thus in a suit for damages for breach of a contract, the cause of action consists in the making of the contract and of its breach. A fact which is necessary to fix the quantum of damages may be proved by the parties at the trial, though the cause of action or the defence does not depend upon it. Such a fact is, therefore also a material fact and must be pleaded in the pleading.[2]

It is essential that all the material facts should be stated[2-a] so as not to embarrass the opposite party and so as to put him on his guard and tell him what he has to meet, when the case comes on for trial.[3] Thus a plaintiff suing on his title is bound to state the nature of the deeds on which he relies in deducing his title.[4] Similarly a party relying upon the fact that notice of dishonour is not necessary[5] or that the ordinary age of minority of the party has been prolonged up to 21[6] or that a property admittedly purchased by A in the name of B was for B's advancement[7] or that a woman claiming maintenance has lost her right on account of her incontinence[8] is bound to plead those facts in his pleading.

If a party omits to state a material fact he will not be allowed to give evidence of that fact at the trial unless the pleading is amended under R. 17 infra.[9] If, however, a party states facts which are not material, then, unless such statements are embarrassing or ambiguous, the Courts will not, as a rule, inquire very closely the materiality thereof.[10] Thus where the particulars of a claim were given with reasonable precision, an incorrect description of one particular fact would not be fatal to the claim.[11] Similarly in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights the plea of denial of marriage was held to include the denial of the validity of marriage.[12] But a plaint which is unnecessarily prolix, argumentative, and full of irrelevent matter should either be rejected or returned for striking out the unnecessary matter.[13]

4. Facts to anticipate opponents' answer not to be pleaded.—It is no part of the pleading to anticipate the opponents' pleading and to state facts in answer thereto. In other words a party should not plead to facts which have not become material at the stage of filing his pleading.[1] Thus the defendant need not plead to cause of action not set out in the plaint.[2] Similarly in an action for libel or slander by publishing particular words, the defendant should

5. Alternative and inconsistent allegations.—In construing Order 19, R. 4 of the English Rules corresponding to this rule, Lindley, L.J.; observed in In Re Morgan: Owen v. Morgan,[1] as follows:—Now I cannot myself construe that order as prohibiting inconsistent pleadings. One sees perfectly well what is meant by it viz., that each party is to state succinctly and concisely and in a summary form, the material facts on which he relies. Now a person may rely upon one set of facts if he can succeed in proving them and he may rely upon another set of facts if he can succeed in proving them.'' It has been held by the Patna High Court[2] that the scope of the Code is more limited in India and forbids a party who is not a stranger to the transaction and who has personal knowledge of the true state of facts from pleading inconsistent facts. And in the undermentioned cases[3] it was held that a party can plead inconsistent facts at any rate where he is a stranger to the transaction thus appearing to suggest that he cannot do so if he was not a stranger to the transaction. The view of the High Court of Patna, it is submitted, is not correct and is distinctly opposed to the general trend of decisions of all the High Courts.[4] A perusal of O. 1,

R. 3 (joinder of defendants), O. 2, R. 3 (joinder of causes of action), and O. 7, Rr. 7 and 8 (reliefs that may be stated by the plaintiff) will clearly show that inconsistent sets of facts may be pleaded and relief claimed in the alternative. The object of permitting alternative reliefs to be claimed in one litigation is to obviate the necessity of another litigation, to dispose of the same controversy or the subject-matter of the same relief though the ground upon which the relief is claimed may be different.[4-a] In Bhutan Mohini Dasi v. Kumud Bala Dasi[5] their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court observed as follows:—"It may be conceded that the Code of Civil Procedure does not prohibit inconsistent pleadings and that there is nothing to prevent either party from setting up two or more inconsistent sets of material facts and claiming relief thereunder in the alternative. A plaintiff may rely upon several different rights alternatively, although they may be inconsistent; so a defendant may raise by his statement of defence, without leave, as many distinct and separate, and therefore inconsistent, defences as he may think proper." The following inconsistent pleas have accordingly been held not to be prohibited by the code:—

1. A plea of forgery and a plea of execution under undue influence, or fraud or a plea of want of consideration.[6]
2. A claim of ownership and right of easement.[7]
3. Claim as a shebait or in the alternative as an owner.[8]
4. Denial of contract of Fire Insurance and if there was a contract the unfulfilment of the conditions precedent to the attaching of liability in the alternative.[9]
5. Plea of grant of perpetual tenancy or in the alternative acquisition of such tenancy by adverse possession.[10]

6. Plea of discharge of mortgage debt or in the alternative plea of right to redeem it.[11]

7. Plea that land is not service inam and, if it is found against, that the party is willing to perform the service.[12]

But the right to plead inconsistent sets of facts is subject to the provision in Rule 16 infra which provides that the Court may strike out any matter which may tend to prejudice or embarass the fair trial of the suit. If, therefore, the inconsistent pleas will lead to the prejudice and embarrassment of the trial, they cannot be allowed.[13] Mere inconsistency of the pleas, however, will not necessarily lead to the embarrassment of the trial.[14] In order to avoid embarrassment in cases where inconsistent pleas are set up, the facts ought not to be mixed up leaving the other party to pick out the facts applicable to each case; they should be distinctly stated so as to show on what alternative facts each of the reliefs sought is founded.[15]

It may, however, be observed that the litigant who avails himself of the right to press inconsistent cases before the Court and endeavours to establish both by contradictory oral testimony, plainly places himself in peril and may find himself entangled in inextricable difficulty, for evidence adduced in support of two absolutely inconsistent cases which are mutually destructive can hardly be expected to secure confidence.[16]

6. Matters affecting damages.—It has already been observed in Note 3 above that all facts which the party pleading is entitled to prove at the trial must be stated in the pleadings. Thus it has been held in England that matters in aggravation of damages (i.e., facts which tend to increase the damages) are material facts which must be pleaded.[1] In Wood v. Durham[2] however, it was held that facts relied upon by the defendant, not as constituting his defence, but in mitigation of damages are not material. The view seems to have turned upon the construction of O. 21, R. 4 of the English Rules which has not been reproduced in this Code. It is submitted that, under the present code, there is no room for any difference in the materiality of facts in aggravation and facts in mitigation of damages, as that rule has not been reproduced in the Code. In collision cases the plaint should be so framed as to set out the circumstances of the collision with clearness and accuracy in order to enable the adversary to know the case he has to meet.[3] Similarly where special damages are claimed, the plaint should give full particulars showing its nature and extent, and showing with dates and items how the amount claimed is made up.[4]

7. Pleadings should not state the evidence by which the facts are to be proved.—As has been seen in Note 1 above, a pleading should not contain facts which are merely evidence to prove the material facts.[1] Thus when the plaintiff alleged that certain of his windows were ancient, the defendant should not plead that in a previous suit the plaintiff had admitted that the windows were not ancient, in as much as that fact is only evidence disproving the plaintiff's case.[2]

An offer without prejudice should not be pleaded in the pleadings.[3]

8. The facts should be stated in a concise form.—Pleadings must be drafted with sufficient definiteness to enable the opposite party to understand the case he is called upon to meet.[1] The material facts must be stated precisely and co-herently[2] and as briefly as is consistent with clearness.[3] When the pleadings are vague and unsatisfactory, the Court should endeavour to have them clearly specified.[4]

The forms of pleadings appended to the Code might as specified in the next rule, be adopted, with advantage, whenever possible to avoid objections on the score of prolixity.

See also rule 4, infra as to certainty in pleadings.

9. Variance between pleading and proof.—A party's case may be disclosed

2. by his answers to interrogatories delivered to him by the opposite party in the suit,
3. by allegations made on oath by him or by any persons present on his behalf, or made by his pleaders,
4. By the contents of documents produced by him.[1]

Issues are framed on the cases of the parties so disclosed, and evidence is directed, at the trial, to the proof of the case so set up, and covered by the issues framed thereon. A party is expected and is bound to prove the case as alleged by him and as covered by the issues framed. This is in accordance with the main principle of practice that a party can only succeed according to what was alleged and proved secundum allegata et probata.[2] He will not be allowed to succeed on a case not so set up by him[3] and cannot be allowed, at the trial, to change his case, or set up a case inconsistent with what he has alleged in his pleading, except by way of amendment of the pleading under O. 6, R. 17.[4] In

2. A sues B for the cancellation of a mortgage document executed by A's father to B, on the ground that A's father was insane and that B fraudulently obtained the document from him. Failing to prove this case, he cannot be allowed to succeed on the ground that A's father, though not insane, was helpless and weak in mind, when the type of insanity connoted in the evidence was something quite different. Durga Baksh v. Muhammad Ali, I. by the opposite party.[7] "The rule that the allegations and the proof must correspond is intended to serve a double purpose, namely, first, to appraise the defendant. distinctly and specifically, of the case he is called upon to answer, so that, he may properly make his defence and may not be taken by surprise; and, secondly, to preserve an accurate record of the cause of action as a protection against a second proceeding founded upon the same allegations."[8] Therefore, the test, when an objection of this kind is taken, is to see whether the party aggrieved has really been taken by surprise, or is prejudiced by the action of the opposite party.[9] In applying this test, the whole of the circumstances must be taken into account, and carefully scrutinised to find out whether there has been such surprise or prejudice as will disentitle a party to relief.[10] Every variance, therefore, between pleading and proof, is not necessarily fatal to the suit or defence[11] and the rule of secundum allegata et probata will not be strictly applied where there could be no surprise and the opposite party is not prejudiced thereby.[12] Thus where a ground though not raised in the pleadings is expressly put in issue[13] or where the new claims set up is not inconsistent with the allegations made in the pleadings and is based on facts alleged therein,[14] there is no question of surprise to the opposite party. Similarly where the defendant makes an admission, a finding in favour of the plaintiff based on such admission, is not incompetent even though it is at variance with the case set up by the plaintiff in his pleading, in as much as there could be no surprise or prejudice to the defendant in such a case.[15] But a party cannot be allowed to abandon his own case, adopt that of the defendant and claim relief on that footing where the latter is prejudiced by such a course.[16] O. 6, R. 2, Note 9.

Illustrations.

1. A and B jointly execute a bond in favour of C for a certain sum of money. A is compelled to pay off the whole amount to C and after so paying it, he brings a suit against B for the recovery of the whole amount on the ground that he (A) was only a surety for B. It is established that A was not a surety but that he and B were equally liable under the bond. In such a case a decree can be given for A for contribution of the amount paid by A for B also. Their Lordships said, "the plaintiff . . . . ought not by reason of his having claimed too much, to be precluded from recovering the proportionate amount of what he actually paid, to which he is undoubtedly entitled, a claim which the pleadings are wide enough to cover."[17]
2. A sues B for rent on the basis of lease-deed. It is found that the lease-deed is, for some reason, not admissible in evidence; in such a case a decree can be given on the basis of use and occupation by the defendant.[18]

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay in the undermentioned cases[23] that suits relating to agreements entered into by persons who stand to each other in the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee or trustee and cestui que trust, are exceptions to the applicability of the rule that parties ought to be kept to their pleadings. In such cases the Court was held to be bound to examine the nature of such agreements where, on the face of them, or having regard to surrounding circumstances, the Court finds prima facie grounds to suspect that the transaction is oppressive or unconscionable.

10. Construction of pleadings.—It has been uniformly held that pleadings in India[1] especially those in the moffusil[2] should not be construed very strictly. Courts in India have no power to non-suit the plaintiff merely because the pleadings are not in proper form[2-a] or the claim is wrongly described[3] or the section wrongly given.[4] The substance of the case should be kept in view and not merely the words used in the pleading.[5] For this purpose the pleadings must be read as a whole.[6]

Order 6, Rule 4—Note 1.
(1) The Rory, (1882) 7 P D 117 (121).

(1) To enable the opposite party to know what case he has to meet and thus to prevent a surprise at the trial,[2] O. 6, R. 4, Note 1.

(2) to limit the generality of the pleadings and so to define and limit the issues to be tried and thus save unnecessary expense.[3]

It must depend upon the facts of each case as to what degree of particularity is required.[4] It may, however, be stated as a general rule that such certainty and particularity will be insisted upon as is reasonable having regard to the circumstances and the nature of the acts themselves.[5] "To insist on less" as was said in Ratcliffe v. Evans, "would be to relax old and intelligible principles. To insist on more would be the vainest pedantry." Particulars must be distinguished from evidence and no party need state anything for the purpose of enabling the opposite party to ascertain the evidence by which he proposes to prove his case.[6] The Courts have uniformly endeavoured to prevent the plaintiff or the defendant as the case may be from prying into the brief of his opponent for finding out what is to be the evidence which is to be produced at the trial. On the other hand the Courts have uniformly said that the plaintiff or the defendant is entitled to be told any and every particular which will enable him properly to prepare his case for the trial so that he may not be taken by surprise.[6-a] Thus one party is not entitled to know the names of the witnesses of the other party for that will be knowing the particulars of evidence. But where the names of witnesses constitute a material fact in a party's case, he is bound to state them. Thus where plaintiff sues for infringement of his trade mark by the defendant, and alleges that on account of the infringement "diverse persons" were induced to buy defendant's goods as plaintiff's, the names of "diverse persons" constitute a material fact in the statement of the plaintiff's case and must be revealed though such "diverse persons" might be coming as witnesses for the plaintiff.[7]

Where a party omits to give particulars, or the particulars furnished are insufficient, the opposite party may apply under the next rule for a further and better statement of particulars,[8] and, if an order under that rule for particulars is disobeyed, then, if the plaintiff is in default, the action should be stayed, and, if the defendant is in default, his defence should be struck out.[9] When a party fails to ask for particulars at the proper time he cannot afterwards be heard to say that he was taken by surprise.[10]

Where a plaint contains averments indicating with reasonable definiteness what the nature of the claim is, it will not be defeated by a small error in one particular. Thus where A, as receiver of the properties of B, sues C on a promissory note executed by C to B, and the plaint correctly states the names of the promisor and the promissee and the date of the promissory note, but the amount is mentioned as Rs. 6,000 instead of Rs. 5,892 and this was due to the fact that A was not in possession of the promissory note, it cannot be said that the defendant is taken by surprise or that he was not aware of what the plaintiff was suing on and therefore, the plaintiff should not fail by reason of such error.[11]

2. Fraud.—In suits on the basis of fraud, the allegation of fraud must be clear, definite, and specific.[1] General allegations of fraud, however strong the words may be in which they are stated, if unaccompanied by particulars, are insufficient to amount to an averment of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice.[1-a] A plaint seeking relief on the ground of fraud but omitting to give particulars does not disclose a cause of action[2] and should be rejected or returned for amendment but the suit should not be dismissed.[3] Fraud may be inferred from the surrounding circumstances,[4] but neither the fact that there are allegations in the written statement from which a plea of this kind can be spun out[5] nor the fact that the defendant himself has told an untrue story[6] is enough to relieve a plaintiff from his obligation to give particulars of the fraud pleaded by him. O. 6, R. 4, Note 2.

A plaintiff seeking to avoid the statute of limitation on the ground of fraud must specifically state the particulars as to how he was kept out of knowledge of his rights by the fraudulent acts of the defendant, and the time when he discovered it.[7]

Allegations of fraud must be substantially proved by the party making the same, though it does not mean that every puzzling artifice or contrivance resorted to by the opposite party, should be unravelled.[8] When one kind of fraud is alleged, another kind of fraud cannot, on failure of proof of the fraud alleged, be substituted for it.[9] And even if the Court finds that fraud was practised, if such fraud is other than that alleged by the plaintiff, the defendant is entitled to have the suit dismissed.[10] This general rule, however, is not applicable where a purdanishin lady is concerned. The obtaining of property, or of any benefit, from such a lady, through the undue and unconscionable abuse of influence by a person in whom trust and confidence are placed, has always been treated as fraud of the gravest character; and if such frauds are alleged and proved, the allegation that they were parts of a scheme very early conceived and deliberately carried out is, whether it be made out or not, of no material consequence in such a suit.[11]

A person cannot be allowed to plead the fraud of his own predecessors in order to avoid the legal consequences of their transactions.[12]

A party who is not aware that a fraud has been committed and does not set up the plea in his pleadings is not estopped from doing so as soon as he becomes aware of the fraud.[13]

3. Breach of Trust.—Particulars of the specific acts constituting the breach of trust must be given to entitle a plaintiff to get relief.[1]

4. Misrepresentation.—When misrepresentations are alleged, the party pleading them should state as to each misrepresentation, its date, and whether it was made in writing or verbally, and as to each verbal misrepresentations, the occasion thereof.[1] Where a suit is brought for damages for infringement of a trade-mark particulars of the persons alleged to have been deceived by the inducement of the defendant should be given.[2]

5. Undue influence and coercion.—Undue influence being a species of fraud must be pleaded with precision and unless it is supported by particulars it will not be investigated by Courts.[1] Thus where a particular transfer of property was challenged on the ground of unsoundness of mind of the transferor, but no case of undue influence was raised in the pleadings it was held that the question could not be properly discussed.[2] The person alleging it must prove, that another person was in a position to dominate his will and exercise influence and that he actually exercised such influence.[3] A mere suspicion or probability will be insufficient to prove coercion.[4] But a specific allegation of undue influence may not be necessary if there is already an allegation of fraud in the plaint.[5] Similarly if there are facts on the record to justify the inference of undue influence, the omission to make an allegation of undue influence specifically, is not fatal to the plaintiff being entitled to relief on that ground; all that the Court has to see is that there is no surprise to the defendant.[6]

6. "Other cases in which particulars may be necessary".—As a general rule where the onus of establishing a positive or negative allegation lies on the plaintiff, the Court will not order the defendant to give particulars of his traverse of that allegation.[1] In other cases, the necessity for particulars depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case. Thus where a custom is set up, the particulars of the custom with the essential requisites to its validity and binding effect must be stated.[2] Similarly where in a suit on a bond the illegality of the consideration is raised as a defence, it must be definitely pleaded and particulars given.[3]

7. Accounts.—Where a claim is for a general account particulars as to the items need not be given. But when a definite sum made up of several items is claimed, particulars of the items will be necessary.[1]

When there is a continuous course of dealing, and the debtor signs in the account book of his creditor for the balance due to his creditor, the cause of action for the suit, is not the acknowledgment itself, as it only evidences the transaction preventing the operation of limitation. It must, therefore, be alleged that there was a promise to pay and that the relationship of the debtor and creditor subsists between the parties.[2] Where the plaintiff impeaches accounts which have been settled on the ground of errors, the errors must be specifically set out. But where no objection was taken to the frame of the suit on the ground that no particulars were given and no prejudice was caused to the defendants, the omission to give particulars becomes immaterial.[3]

In the case of suits on instalment-bonds, particulars as to the payments must be alleged and the precise words of the bond should also be stated to show how the bar of limitation is got over.[4]

8. Contract.—Where a contract or agreement is relied upon, particulars should be given, stating its date and showing whether it is in writing, or is verbal, or implied, or partly one and partly the other. If it is in writing the document or documents must be identified and described, and if it is implied, the circumstances from which the implication arises must be stated.[1]

9. Defamation.—In an action for defamation the plaintiff should give particulars of as to when and where the libel or slander, as the case may be, was published, and the persons to whom it was published.[1] If, however, all the persons to whom the publication was made were not known to the plaintiff he may plead that he is unable to give particulars until after discovery.[2] Such particulars will naturally be unnecessary if the defamation or slander is published in a newspaper.[3]

As the defendant is entitled to know the precise charge against him the exact words constituting the libel must be set out.[4] If they are contained in letters or articles in newspapers all the letters and articles should be produced.[5] If the letter containing the libel is destroyed, that fact must be mentioned in order to provide for the letting in of secondary evidence.[6] A plea of innuendo must be clearly brought out, and it must be shown how the words were capable of bearing a libellous meaning.[7]

A defendant relying on the plea of justification must similarly give particulars of the specific instances on which he intends to rely.[8] The defence should show whether the justification is as to the whole or part of the matter published.[9] Where the libellous words are capable of two meanings the defendant must state whether he justifies for both meanings or only as to one only and which one.[10]

A defendant who pleads fair comment is bound to give particulars of the fact on which he commented and that they are true and fair and made in the interests of the public.[11] Where the plea of justification is made in the form of a rolled up plea[12] and the plea indicates the materials on which the comment is based, particulars of those materials will not be ordered. If the materials are not indicated such particulars may be ordered.[13]

10. Claim for a lump sum.—Where a lump sum is claimed for money paid on several occasions, particulars as to when and to whom it was paid and the items composing such sum must be given,[1] so that defendant may see whether he may or may not plead a set off or limitation.[2]

11. Malicious prosecution.—A defendant simply denying the want of reasonable and probable cause will not be asked to furnish particulars thereof inasmuch as the onus lies on the plaintiff to show want of reasonable and probable cause.[1] Where, however, reasonable and probable cause is affirmatively pleaded particulars thereof may be ordered.[2]

12. Misconduct.—General allegations of misconduct are not sufficient. Where the defendant justifies his action on the ground of misconduct of the plaintiff, the specific acts of misconduct should be given.[1] The particulars must give full information as to what facts are relied on and the nature of the charge with sufficient detail to prevent the defendant being taken by surprise at the trial.[2] Where, however, specific evidence on the point in dispute is exclusively in the hands of one party, it is not reasonable to insist upon the other party giving definite particulars of misconduct which an examination of that evidence alone would disclose.[3]

13. Negligence—Nuisance.—In an action for negligence, the plaintiff must give full particulars of the negligence complained of, and of the damage he has sustained.[1] Thus in a case of collision the plaintiff must state when and where the accident took place and the particular act of negligence and give details of the loss and expenses incurred.[2] The plaint must clearly allege the duty enjoined on the defendant with the breach of which he is charged.[3] The same principles apply to cases of contributory negligence.[4]

Where in an action for public nuisance special damages are necessary to be proved, the plaint should state the full particulars of such damages.[5]

14. Recovery of land.—In an action for recovery of land, the plaintiff must give the nature and particulars of his title[1] and must show that he has got a right to immediate possession.[1-a] If he claims as heir, he must show how he claims to be heir, and must set out the links of relationship through which he claims,[2] and if he claims as an assignee, the steps by which the estate became assigned to him.[3] A general statement that by virtue of certain deeds he got title will be struck out as being embarrassing.[4] He must state the effect of the deeds and documents[5] though the precise words are unnecessary.[6]

In a suit by a lessor against a lessee for possession, the lessor need not allege anything more than the lease.[7] A defendant in an action for the recovery of land, who is in possession of the land is not compelled to give particulars, but a defendant in an action to establish title to land who sets up a plea of purchase bona fide should give particulars.[8]

15. Public High way and private rights of way.—Where a public right of way is pleaded, the termini need not be set out because the public have a right to use the way for all purposes at all times. In the case of private rights of way the termini or the way and the course which it takes must be shown with reasonable precision.[1]

16. Particulars of defence.—Any party to a suit, be he the plaintiff or defendant, will have to give particulars of the circumstances on which he relies as the basis of his plea. The defendant is also subject to this rule.[1]

But ordinarily if a defendant merely denies the plaint allegations, the defendant will not be required to give particulars as the plaintiff will have to establish his case.[2] Particulars may be however ordered in regard to positive allegations[3] as where justification is pleaded in an action for libel.[4]

Synopsis.

1. Scope and object of the rule.
2. Application for particulars —When to apply.
3. Discovery before particulars.
4. When particulars need not be given.
5. "Upon such terms as to costs and otherwise as may be just."
6. Failure to give particulars after order.
7. Amendment of further particulars.

No application for particulars—Effect. See Note 2, Pt. (6).

1. Scope and object of the rule.—If a party omits to give in his pleading any particulars which he ought to have given according to Rule 4, the other party may apply under this rule for further and better particulars of any matter stated in the pleading. The object of obtaining particulars is, as has been seen in Note 1 to Rule 4 above, to enable the opposite party to know what case he has to meet and to prevent a surprise at the trial and so that he may not have to go to trial embarrassed by the obscurity or the incompleteness of the case which he has to meet.[1] Furnishing particulars of what has been pleaded insufficiently or vaguely is not a discretionary matter at all. It is ordering one of the parties to give the other his dues.[2] It is the duty of the Court as well to see that parties plead their cases so plainly, fully and clearly that each side knows the nature of the case which has to be met. If the pleadings are not definite, the Court will have difficulty in excluding much irrelevant evidence and consequently much public time may be wasted.[3]

2. Application for particulars—when to apply.—An application under this rule should specify the particulars or the further and better particulars

required and should ask for the costs of the application also.[1] Though there is no time-limit for applying for particulars,[2] it should, as a rule be applied for, within a reasonable time after the necessity arises; otherwise if there is undue delay, the application may be refused.[3] But a defendant does not waive his right to apply for particulars by delivering a defence.[4] There will however be no necessity for amendment by giving particulars when the Court has already come to a definite finding on a point.[5] If a party having a right to apply for particulars, does not do so in the trial Court, he cannot complain of want of particulars in the appellate Court, for his failure to apply operates as an estoppel.[6]

3. Discovery before particulars.—In some cases like suits by a principal against his agent, when the defendant applies for particulars and the plaintiff does not know the facts necessary to enable him to give particulars and the defendant knows them, the practice is to order the defendant to give discovery and to postpone the application for particulars till then.[1] "It is good practice and good sense, that when the defendant knows the facts and the plaintiffs do not, the defendant should give discovery, before the plaintiffs deliver particulars".[2] But no hard and fast rule can be laid down to determine when particulars should precede discovery, or discovery should precede particulars. Each case will depend upon its own circumstances.[3] In a suit for libel characterising the plaintiff as an "imposter" and "a charity swindler" the defence was of justification. Plaintiff asked for particulars of the charge, but the defendant wanted inspection of the plaintiffs' account books. The Court refused to allow the defendant inspection of plaintiffs' accounts and Kay, L. J., said "To apply this practice to the case of a libel would be to sanction the publication of a libel, when the libellor knew no facts justifying the libellous statement, because he believed he could by the process of discovery, elicit such facts."[4] From this case it is clear that discovery before particulars will not be ordered, where the particulars are within the knowledge or ought to be within the knowledge of the person applying for particulars.

4. When particulars need not be given.—All particulars delivered should be the best that the party delivering them can give. In some cases where the party is, or states he is, unable at the time, to give the particulars required, an order is made for the best particulars he can give, reserving him leave to deliver amended particulars (not less than a fixed time before trial of the suit.) A party will not, as a rule, be ordered to give particulars of facts or matters which the other party has to prove or as to which he merely traverses the allegations of his opponent.[1]

5. "Upon such terms as to costs and otherwise as may be just".—When ordering delivery of particulars, the Court may order the party in default to pay a specified sum to the other side for the costs occasioned by the application, such payment to be made on or before the delivery of particulars.[1]

6. Failure to give particulars after order.—When an order for delivery of particulars under this rule is not obeyed, if the plaintiff is in default the suit may be stayed, or, the defence may be struck out under Rule 16, infra if the defendant is in default.[1] It has also been held that the Court has even got the power to dismiss a suit in the case of default of a plaintiff to obey the order of the Court.[2] The Court has got the power to stay a suit or to strike out a defence even if such a condition is not added to the original order for delivery of particulars, and this power is a discretionary one.[3]

7. Amendment of further particulars.—A party having delivered particulars in an action cannot withdraw, add to, or amend, them without leave of Court.[1] As a rule, however, leave will be granted when the amendment will cause no injury to the opposite party, but the applicant will be ordered to pay the costs of his opponent in any event.[2]

O. 6, R. 6, Notes 1—2.

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.
2. Specification, where necessary, must be distinct.

Allegation of non-performance of condition precedent, not needed. See Note 1, Pts. (1) to (3).

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule is new and is identical with O. 19, R. 14 of the Rules of the Supreme Court of England.

It is not necessary for a party to plead expressly the performance of a condition precedent. It will, under this rule, be implied in his pleading. It is for the other party, if he contends that there was a condition precedent, and that it has not been duly performed, to say what that condition is and to plead its non-performance. Otherwise its due performance will be presumed.[1] Thus, where a demand for payment to be made at Lloyd's Bank was a condition precedent, and it was not pleaded that such demand has been made, it was held that this rule applied.[2] Where there was a question of service on a lessee of the notice required by S. 14 of the Conveyancing Act (1881), it was held that the statement of claim must be read as if it contained an allegation that the plaintiffs had given the necessary notice before the commencement of the action.[3] If any party contests the performance of a condition precedent, then the other party must prove the performance of the condition.[4]

A condition precedent does not form part of the cause of action. It is some formality attached to the cause of action, until the performance of which, the right of action is suspended. But, whenever a condition precedent goes to the root of the matter it is proper and safer to allege performance of it in the plaint. For instance in the case of a claim on a cheque, an allegation of notice of dishonour or of facts excusing such notice, was held essential.[5]

The allegation contesting the performance of a condition precedent must not be vague or general but must be specific.[6]

2. Specification, where necessary, must be distinct.—Under the present rule an averment of the due performance of all conditions precedent is implied in every pleading and the opposite party must specify distinctly any conditions the performance or occurrence of which he intends to contest.

Synopsis.

1. Scope and object of the rule.
2. New ground of claim.

"Departure in pleading." See Note 1.

1. Scope and object of the Rule.—It has been seen in Note 1 to Rule 1 ante, that the parties may, subsequent to the written statement of the defendant, file subsequent pleadings with the leave of the Court, under the provisions of O. 8, R. 9, infra. It is at the stage of such subsequent pleadings that the provisions enacted in this rule against what is called "a departure in pleading" applies for the first time. A departure takes place when in any pleading the party deserts the ground that he took up in his preceding pleading, and resorts to another and different ground. The object of this rule is to prevent such a "departure". A statement made by a party to the Court is in the nature of a supplementary pleading for the purposes of this rule.[1]

2. New ground of claim.—Where a plaint is defective, it cannot be supplemented by a subsequent statement.[1] A claimed one-half of £500 alleging that B, the defendant, had received it as trustee for himself and the plaintiff A in equal shares. B pleaded that he received only £311, half of which he paid into Court. A thereupon replied, that B ought to have received the full £500, and that having wrongfully compromised with the debtor, is liable for half of £500. It was held that this was a new ground of claim which could not be allowed.[2]

3. Inconsistent allegations.—A party cannot in subsequent pleading make any allegation inconsistent with what he has alleged originally.[1] Thus if a statement of claim (i.e., plaint) alleges merely a negligent breach of trust, the reply must not assert that such breach of trust was fraudulent.[2] If such inconsistent allegations are made in a subsequent pleading without obtain-

Synopsis.

1. Denial of contract.

1. Denial of contract.—Where the defendant disputes the legality or sufficiency in point of law of the contract set up by the plaintiff, he must plead specifically the grounds of his objection; it is not sufficient to merely traverse any allegation, the plaintiff may have made.[1] Thus, where in a suit on a contract of mortgage, the defendant denied the consideration for the mortgage it was held that he cannot at the trial contend that the mortgage was not duly attested, and was therefore invalid.[2] But no Court will enforce an illegal contract, if the illegality is duly brought to the notice of the Court, and if the person invoking the aid of the Court is himself implicated in the illegality; it matters not whether the defendant has or has not pleaded the illegality.[3] The reason is that a Court will not assist a plaintiff where his own case discloses the illegality of the transaction.

O. 6, R. 9, Notes 1—2.

1. Scope of the Rule.—Rule 2 of this order provides that every pleading shall contain a statement in a concise form of the material facts on which the party pleading relies. Where such a material fact is mentioned in a document, it is sufficient under this rule to state the effect of the document as briefly as possible without setting out the whole or any part thereof. Thus, in an action brought by the devisee of land under a will, for the recovery of the land devised, it was held that it was not necessary to set out the precise words of the will.[1] A party is, however, bound to state the nature of the deeds on which he relies in deducing his title from the person under whom he claims.[2] It is not enough for him to say simply that by virtue of a certain deed he is entitled to the property claimed by him.[3]

2. Precise words when necessary.—In an action for libel or slander the precise words complained of are material, and should always be set out verbatim.[1]

2. Malice.—Where malice is a material ingredient of the plaintiff's case, as being a necessary part of his cause of action, as in suit for damages for slander or malicious prosecution, it should be alleged specifically in the

Where the plaintiff is or was in possession of any land, it is sufficient as against a wrong-doer, to aver possession only; he need not set out his title as the same will be presumed, in accordance with the maxim, Omnia Præsumuntur contra spoliatorem—every presumption is made against a wrong-doer.[1]

R. 14. [Ss. 51, 115.] Every pleading shall be signed by the party and his pleader (if any): Provided that where a party pleading is, by reason of absence or for other good cause, unable to sign the pleading, it may be signed by any person duly authorised by him to sign the same or to sue or defend on his behalf. BENGAL.—

Insert the following after Rule 14 as Rule 14-A:—

"14-A.—Every pleading when filed shall be accompanied by a statement in a prescribed form, signed as provided in Rule 14 of this Order, of the party's address for service. Such address may from time to time be changed by lodging in Court a form duly filled up and stating the new address of the party and accompanied by a verified petition. The address so given shall be called the registered address of the party and shall, until duly changed as aforesaid, be deemed to be the address of the party for the purpose of service of all processes in the suit or in any appeal from any decree or order therein made and for the purposes of execution, and shall hold good subject as aforesaid for a period of two years, after the final determination of the cause or matter. Service of any process may be effected upon a party at his registered address in like manner in all respects as though such party resided thereat."

1. Pleading to be signed.—The object of requiring every pleading to be signed by the party is to prevent, as far as possible, disputes as to whether a suit was instituted with the plaintiff's knowledge and authority.[1] Judges are bound to see that the pleadings are signed properly.[2] In cases where the plaint contains allegations of fraud which must be false or true to the knowledge of the plaintiff, the defendant can insist on the plaintiff himself signing the plaint.[3] There is no difference between vakalaths, affidavits and pleadings as to the procedure by which they can be signed.[4]

This rule is made applicable to proceedings under the undermentioned Local Acts.[5]

2. Signature by persons duly authorised.—Under the corresponding sections of the Codes of 1859 and 1877, there were no provisions for the signing and verification of the pleading by the authorised agent of the party, but it was held, by applying S. 36 of the Code of 1877, (now O. 3, R. 1), that an authorised agent could validly sign the pleading on behalf of the party.[1] In view of these decisions the legislature expressly added a proviso in S. 51 of the Code of 1882, (now O. 6, R. 14), under which an authorised agent may validly sign a pleading under certain circumstances, namely, where the party pleading, is by reason of absence or for other good cause unable to sign the pleading.[1-a] The absence must be of such a kind as makes it impossible for the party to sign the pleading, e.g., absence on a sea cruise or a journey into unknown regions where communication is impracticable; the words "other good cause" are, however, of wider significance and leave the matter entirely in the discretion of the Court.[2] O. 6, R. 14, Notes 2—3.

The question as to when a person can be said to be duly authorised by the party, depends upon the circumstances of each case.[3] A pleading signed by an unauthorised person is not valid,[4] but, in such a case, the Court may permit the party himself to sign it later,[5] or, if the person signing it is subsequently authorised, treat the original plaint itself as valid, provided there is no question of limitation.[6]

3. Omission to sign pleadings—Effect.—An irregularity in the signature or verification of a plaint is a mere defect of procedure[1] and does not affect the jurisdiction of the Court.[2] An omission or mistake in the signature is not fatal to the suit but is capable of being cured by appropriate amendments.[3] In fact the proper course in such cases is not to dismiss the suit or reject it but to get the same amended.[4] The defect may also be waived by the defendant not objecting thereto at the earliest possible opportunity, in which case it cannot be allowed to be raised for the first time in appeal.[5] Where several persons institute a suit it is not necessary that all should sign the plaint. O. 6, R. 15, Notes 1--2.

1. Scope and object of the rule.—The object of verifying a pleading is to fix, on the party verifying, the responsibility for the statement that it contains.[1] The Court is bound to see in every case that the pleadings are verified in the manner prescribed and are not treated as mere formalities.[2] In the case of pardanishin ladies, their pleadings will not be accepted as satisfactory proof of the contents thereof unless it is strictly proved that the pleadings was read out and explained to them.[3]

The verification of a pleading is not evidence of the facts contained in the pleading, and cannot form the basis for a decree in an undefended suit.[4]

A contentious probate proceeding should, under S. 295 of the Succession Act, (XXXIX of 1925) take the form of a suit, and should be verified by the parties.[5] But a petition presented by the Administrator-General under the Administrator-General's Act (III of 1913) need not, under the provisions of S. 29 of that Act, be verified by the Administrator-General.[6]

This rule is made applicable to proceedings under the undermentioned Local Acts.[7]

2. Who can verify pleadings.—Under S. 28 of the Code of 1859, it was necessary, to show in order to enable a third person to verify the pleading, that the party himself was, by reason of absence or other good cause, unable to sign the pleading.[1] Under this rule a pleading can be verified,

(1) by the party, where there is only one party,

(2) by one of the parties where there are several parties, and

(3) by a third person who is proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case.[2]

O. 6, R.15, Notes 2—5.

It is, however, open to the opposite party to insist on the party himself verifying the pleading in important cases, e.g., where there are allegations of fraud or circumstances tending to affect any possible question of limitation, if particularly within the knowledge of the party,[3] or where there are allegations of a scandalous nature.[4]

The rule does not require that the verification of a plaint by a third person should be made in the presence of the Court; but having regard to the necessity of satisfying the Court that the person, other than the plaintiff, who verifies the plaint, is acquainted with the facts of the case, it is desirable that it should be made in the presence of the Court.[5]

3. Mode of verification.—Where a plaint contains averments of fact some of which are within the knowledge of the plaintiff and others which are made upon information which he believes to be true, as, where, for example, the averments in first three paragraphs are made on his own knowledge, and the averments in paragraphs 4, 5 and 6 are made upon on information and not on the knowledge of the plaintiff, the verification should to be as to averments of paragraphs 1, 2 and 3, that they are true to his knowledge, and as to paragraphs 4, 5 and 6, that they are made on information which he believes to be true. A verification in the form—''the contents of the plaint are true to the best of my knowledge and belief'' is not in strict compliance with the Code though it substantially complies with it.[1]

4. Effect of defective verification.—A defect in verification is only an irregularity in procedure and will not be a ground for rejecting the plaint.[1] It can be cured by amendment at any stage of the suit.[2] It is not a ground of interference in appeal under the provisions of Section 99 of the Code.[3] In the case of an application in forma pauperis, however, the rule is stricter. Under the provisions of Order 33, Rule 5 of the Code it is provided that, where the application is not framed and verified properly, the Court shall reject the application.[4]

5. Omission to verify.—The want of verification does not have the effect of making the plaint void. It merely amounts to an irregularity. It does not affect the merits of the case, and can be rectified by permitting the party concerned to make good the deficiency by amending the pleadings under O. 6, R. 17 of the Code.[1] The amendment may be made even though the period of limitation may have expired on the date of verification.[2] O. 6. R.15, Notes 5—7.

6. Objection to verification.—Objection to verification should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and if not so taken, will be deemed to have been waived[1] and cannot be raised after judgment and decree.[2]

7. Effect of false verification.—Pleadings far from being mere formalities are required by law to be true.[1] Verifications being made under the sanction of a solemn declaration, a false verification will render the party verifying, liable to a prosecution for an offence under Section 191, Indian Penal Code.[2] But a petition not required by law to be verified cannot, if verified falsely, be made the basis of a criminal prosecution.[3] A false verification will, not however, entail the dismissal of the suit, especially, if the defendant takes no objection thereto at the proper time.[4]

1. Scope and object of the rule.—Every party is entitled, ex debito justitiæ, to have the case against him presented in an intelligible form, so that he may not be embarrassed in meeting it.[1] This rule has been enacted to give effect to this principle. It enables a party to apply to strike out, or compel the amendment of, the whole or any part of his opponent's pleadings which may be unnecessary or scandalous, or which may tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the action.[2] The Court may also suo motu strike out or amend such matters in such manner and on such terms as it thinks just.[3] The power to strike out or compel amendment under this rule is a discretionary one,[4] but should be exercised with great care and caution.[5] It will be exercised only when some substantial objection to the pleading complained of, or some real embarrassment is shown.[6] Thus a written statement ought not to be struck out unless it is clear beyond all reasonable doubt, that the allegations in it are such as cannot afford a defence to the action, and which, if not struck out, would unnecessarily delay the suit.[7]

Where part only of the pleading is objectionable, that part will, as a rule, be struck out if it is severable from the rest,[8] but if it is not so severable, the whole pleading may be struck out.[9] The principle underlying this rule with its limitation is given expression to in Knowles v. Roberts, (1888) 38 C.D. 263 where it is said by Bowen, L.J.,—"It seems to me that the rule that the Court is not to dictate to parties, how they should frame their case, is one that ought always to be preserved sacred. But that rule is, of course, subject to this modification and limitation, that the parties must not offend against the rules of pleadings which have been laid down by the law; and if a party introduces a pleading which is unnecessary and it tends to prejudice, embarrass and delay the trial of the action, it then becomes a pleading, which is beyond his right."

2. Unnecessary.—As a rule a pleading or allegation will not be struck out under this rule merely because it is unnecessary, unless it is also scandalous or embarrassing.[1] Merely unnecessary pleading without its being scandalous, or otherwise objectionable, will only affect the cost of the pleading.[1-a] But where the pleading in addition to its being unnecessary also attributes improper motives to the defendant[1-b] or charges the defendant with dishonest conduct[1-c] or makes it embarrassing for the defendant,[1-d] it will be ordered to be struck out. Where, however, a plaint[2] or a written statement[3] is unnecessarily prolix and verbose, or argumentative, or is full of matter which is wholly irrelevant or un-understandable it can be dealt with under this rule.

3. Scandalous.—A Court has a general jurisdiction to prevent any of its processes being used for the purpose of disseminating scandalous and irrelevant matter.[1] Where such matter is introduced in the pleadings, the Court may order the same to be expunged.[2]

Allegations made in a pleading for the mere purpose of abusing or prejudicing the opposite party and any indecent or offensive matters are scandalous.[3] Very often, if allegations made are unnecessary, they will likewise be scandalous.[4] Thus where a plaintiff alleges in his plaint, dishonest conduct against the defendant, but no relief is sought on that ground, the allegations will be struck out as scandalous and embarrassing.[5] Where, in an action by a wife against her husband for rectification of her marriage-settlement, a statement was made in the plaint, that the plaintiff declined to live with the defendant on account of his having committed an assault on a young girl, the allegation was held to be scandalous and was ordered to be struck out.[6] Allegations as to partiality against the judge, made in a memorandum of appeal, were expunged by the High Court in the undermentioned case.[7]

But a pleading or allegation which is alleged to be scandalous, cannot be struck out, if it is necessary or relevant to the issue or one of the issues in the action.[8] Indeed a matter cannot be considered as scandalous at all, if it is material to the issue (i.e., will affect the result of the action if proved to be true), however grave the imputations may be, whether of immorality or otherwise.[9] The Court will not, in an application to expunge or strike out allegations alleged to be scandalous, go into the question of their truth or falsehood. The only question is: Are they relevant to the issues in the suit? If they are, they cannot be expunged.[10]

4. "Or which may tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the trial". The question whether a pleading is embarrassing is, in each case, a question for the judge to decide in view of the facts and circumstances of the particular case.[1] "The rule that the Court is not to dictate to the parties how they should frame their case, is one that ought always to be preserved sacred. But that rule is, of course, subject to the modification and limitation that the parties must not offend against the rules of pleading which have been laid down by the law, and if a party introduces a pleading which is unnecessary, and it tends to prejudice, embarrass and delay the trial of the action, it then becomes a pleading which is beyond his right."[2] A claim or defence which a party is not entitled to make use of,[3] or a pleading which is ambiguous or unintelligible,[4] or a pleading which contains unnecessary or irrelevant allegations[5] are all embarrassing and may be struck out. But a pleading cannot be struck out as irrelevant unless the irrelevancy is quite clear.[6] Nor is a pleading necessarily embarrassing by the reason merely of the fact that it states inconsistent or alternative allegations.[7] Where the plaint was verbose, extremely long, involved and impossible to understand, and did not raise any fact which would show that the judge had jurisdiction to hear the case, it was held by the High Court of Allahabad that the proper course was to strike out the plaint under this rule.[8] Similarly where particulars are called for from a defendant under O. 6, R. 5 and he fails to comply with the order, the defence may be struck out under this rule, if without the particulars, his pleading is obscure, incomplete and embarrassing.[8-a]

This rule applies to a pleading which tends to prejudice or embarrass a party at the actual trial of the suit as well as one which tends to embarrass him at any stage of the action.[9]

5. Matter may be struck out or amended at any stage of the proceeding.—The rule empowers the Court to strike out or compel the amendment of any pleading at any stage of the proceeding.[1] But the rule being discretionary, the Court may refuse to exercise its power unless the application is made at the earliest opportunity.[2] An objection under this rule is no ground for interference when the point is taken for the first time, in appeal.[3]

6. Power of the appellate Court to expunge such matters.—The appellate Court has power to return the memorandum of appeal where it contains allegations of partiality against the judge whose decree is in question, and order the objectionable portion to be expunged.[1]

The High Court has power to expunge remarks appearing in the judgment of the lower Court, but the power will be exercised only in extraordinary cases such as when the observations are pointedly seditious, blasphemous or irrelevantly scandalous.[2] Where a Subordinate Judge, while allowing amendment of a Devasthanam Scheme, remarked against a trustee that he "did not care a brass farthing for Devasthanam," it was held that it was not a fit case for the High Court to exercise the power of expunging the remarks.[3]

7. Appeal.—An order under this rule is not appealable either under Section 104 or O. 43, R. 1. Nor is the order a "Judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent so as to be appealable thereunder.[1]

1. Scope of the rule.—S. 53 of the old Code which dealt with amendment, return and rejection of the plaint ran as follows:—

"The plaint may, at the discretion of the Court,—

(a) at, or any time before, the settlement of issues be rejected, if it does not disclose a cause of action;

(b) at, or any time before, the settlement of issues be returned for amendment within a time to be fixed by the Court, and upon terms as to the payment of costs occasioned by such amendment as the Court thinks fit, if it—

(i) is not signed and verified as hereinbefore required,

(ii) does not state correctly and without prolixity the several particulars hereinbefore required, or contains, particulars other than those so required.

(iii) is wrongly framed by reason of non-joinder or mis-joinder of parties, or joins causes of action which ought not to be joined in the same suit, or

O. 6, R. 17, Note 1.

(iv) is not framed in accordance with the provisions of Section 42;

(c) at any time before judgment, be amended by the Court upon such terms as to the payment of costs as the Courts thinks fit:

Provided that a plaint shall not be amended either by the party to whom it is returned for amendment, or by the Court, so as to convert a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character.

When a plaint is amended under this section, the amendment shall be attested by the signature of the Judge.''

The amendment of proceedings in Courts have been dealt with under this Code in various parts thereof:—

1. S. 152 deals with amendments of judgments, decrees and orders.
2. S. 153 confers a general power on the Court to amend any defect or error in any proceeding in a suit.
3. O. 1, R. 10 provides for the amendment of a plaint by striking off or adding parties to a suit.
4. O. 6, R. 16 deals with the compulsory amendment of the opponent's pleading.
5. The present rule deals with the amendment, with the leave of the Court, by a party of his own pleading.
6. O. 14, R. 5 deals with the amendment of the issues framed in the case.

It will be seen from a comparison of S. 53 of the Old Code with the present rule, that the latter is very much wider in terms than the old section. It consists of two parts:—

(a) The Court may, at any stage of the proceedings, allow either party to alter or amend his pleading in such manner and on such terms as may be just; and

(b) All such amendments as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties, shall be made.

The first portion leaves the matter of amendment of pleadings entirely to the discretion of the Court, while the second portion makes it imperative on the Judge to make all such amendments as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties.[1] This duty has, however, been interpreted to be only a rule of conduct, which is subject to the inherent power of the Court to prevent injustice and abuse of process of the Court.[2] Under the corresponding English Rule (R. 1, O. 28), Lord Esher said "A rule has been enunciated by the Court which is rather a rule of conduct, than a rule of rigid law such as can never be departed from; because I take it that the Court might depart from it, if there were very exceptional circumstances in any particular case leading the Court to think that it would not be right to apply it. It is nevertheless, a rule of conduct, which must generally be followed".[2-a]

The object of the Rule is, that Court should get at and try the merits of the cases that come before them, and should, consequently, allow all amendments that may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real question in controversy between the parties provided it can be done without causing injustice to the other side. In Cropper v. Smith,[3] Bowen L. J. observed as follows:—

"It is a well-established principle that the object of the Courts is to decide the rights of the parties and not punish them for the mistakes they make in the conduct of their cases by deciding otherwise than in accordance with their right . . . . I know of no kind of error or mistake, which if not fraudulent or intended to overreach, a Court ought not to correct if it can be done without injustice to the other party. The Courts do not exist for the sake of discipline, but for the sake of deciding matters in controversy, and I do not regard such amendments as a matter of favour or grace.....It seems to me that as soon as it appears that the way in which a party has framed his case will not lead to a decision of the real matter in controversy, it is as much a matter of right on his part to have it corrected, if it can be done without injustice, as anything else in a case is a matter of right."

The provisions of this rule also apply to the trial of cases before the Sikh Gurdwara Tribunal under the Sikh Gurdwara Act, (VIII of 1925),[4] to cases before a Subordinate Judge deciding a dispute under the Madras District Municipal Rules,[5] and to all suits, appeals and proceedings before the Dy. Commissioner and to all appeals from decisions therein, under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act.[6]

2. "The Court may allow either party to alter or amend"—Discretion of Court.—As has been noticed in the above note, the amendment of pleadings is in the discretion of the Court. Under S. 53 of old Code, the discretion was somewhat limited as to the time and the extent of the amendment allowable. But this rule confers a very wide discretion on the Courts in the matter of amendment of pleadings.[1] The discretion must, however, be exercised on judicial principles and not in an arbitrary, vague or fanciful manner[2] or so as to cause injustice to the opposite side. The main considerations to be borne in mind in exercising the discretion, are that the rules of procedure have no other aim than to facilitate the task of justice,[3] that multiplicity of suits should be avoided[4] and that the interests of substantial justice should be advanced.[5] Thus a Court should allow the amendment of a pleading where there has been a clerical error, or a bona fide wrong description of property or where there has been a mistake of law or fact,[6] provided there is no injustice to the other side which cannot be compensated by the award of costs.[7] O. 6, R. 17, Notes 2—3.

3. Amendment of plaint introducing new case.—Under Section 53 of the old Code, the rule as to amendments was more rigid and restricted than it is under the present Code. It was specifically provided by the proviso to that section that no amendment could be allowed which converted a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character.[1] Thus in the following classes of cases it was held that the amendment prayed for altered the character of the suit and was consequently disallowed:

Suit against the defendant on the basis of his being a trespasser; amendment into a suit for rent based on a subsisting tenancy.[2] Suit for rent on the basis of tenancy; amendment into a suit for damages for use and occupation.[3] Suit based on one ground of claim; amendment into a suit based on in the old section that no amendment could be allowed which changed the character of the suit has been omitted[18] and a new provision has been introduced by O. 6, R. 7 which implies that even an amendment introducing a new ground of claim or an allegation of fact inconsistent with the original pleading may be allowed in proper cases. O. 6, R. 17, Note 3.

Illustrations.

1. A sues B for the recovery of the sum of money due on settlement of accounts of a dissolved partnership. He subsequently applies to amend his plaint by substituting a claim for accounts, of a dissolved partnership. Here the amendment clearly effects a change in the character of the suit, but the Court is not powerless, as it was under the old Code, to allow the amendment.[19]

2. A sues B for the specific performance of a contract alleged to have been entered into by B with A. Subsequently he applies for the amendment of the plaint so as to convert it into a suit for damages for breach of the said contract. The Court has power to allow the amendment if it does not cause injustice to the other side.[20]

3. A files a suit against B for possession of lands on the basis of a compromise entered into by the parties and filed by them in a previous suit. The compromise was neither registered nor embodied in the decree. A subsequently applies for amendment of the plaint by converting it into a suit for the specific performance of the contract embodied in the compromise. The amendment could be allowed.[21]

4. A and B entered into an agreement for sale of goods by A to B, the goods to be taken delivery of by B on a certain date. B failed to take such delivery and A re-sold the goods more than two months after the date of the breach of the contract by B and then filed a suit for damages against B on the basis of such re-sale. Finding that, owing to the delay in making the re-sale he may not get damages on the basis of re-sale, he applied for an amendment of the plaint by claiming damages on the basis of breach of contract itself. Held that such amendment should be allowed.[22]

But though under the present Code there is no such rigid rule, as was enacted in the old Code against the allowing of the amendment converting a suit of one character into a suit of an another and inconsistent character,[22-a] and the whole matter is entirely in the discretion of the Court, still as a general rule, the Court will not, in the exercise of such discretion, allow an amendment converting a suit of one character into a suit of another character.[23]

O. 6, R. 17, Note 3.

There is one limitation however, on the wide powers of amendment that can be exercised by the Court under this Code and that is, that the Court cannot, by way of amendment, substitute one distinct cause of action for another, or change the subject-matter of the suit.[24] In Ma Shwe Mya v. Maung Po Hnaung[25] their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows:—

"All Rules of Court are nothing but provisions intended to secure the proper administration of justice and it is therefore essential that they should be made to serve and be subordinate to that purpose, so that full powers of amendment must be enjoyed and should always be liberally exercised; but none the less, no power has yet been given to enable one distinct cause of action to be substituted for another, nor to change, by means of amendment, the subject matter of the suit."

The reason of the above rule is that the substitution of a totally new case in place of the original one cannot be said, in any sense to be an amendment of the original claim. Nor can it be said that a totally new case is "necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties" that is, the controversy disclosed in the suit as originally framed.

It follows from the principles set forth above that under the present Code:—

(1) An amendment will generally be allowed where the nature of the suit is not altered, provided it does not cause prejudice or surprise to the opposite party.[26] Such amendments were allowed under the old Code also.[27]

(2) An amendment may be allowed even if it introduces a new ground of claim or an allegation of fact inconsistent with the original pleading, where the Court thinks it just and necessary.[28] O. 6, R. 17, Note 3.

(3) An amendment which changes the character of the suit will not, as a general rule, be allowed by the Court in the exercise of its discretion.[29]

(4) The Court has no power to allow an amendment which substitutes one distinct cause of action for another, or which changes the subject-matter of the suit.[30]

In the following cases the amendments applied for were not allowed on the ground that their introduction would totally change the character of the suit:—

(1) Suit for possession; amendment into a suit for redemption[31] or into a suit to enforce a mortgage.[32]

(2) Suit for rent; amendment into one for use and occupation.[33]

(3) Suit for declaration that a partnership was dissolved and for accounts; amendments so as to convert it into one for remuneration for services.[34]

(4) Claim laid on the footing that defendant was carrier; amendment into one based on his liability as bailee.[35]

but to the local authority. At a subsequent stage of the case B applied for amendment of the written statement to raise the said plea. At the time of the application, A's remedy against the local authority was time-barred. It was held that the proposed amendment displaced the plaintiff's suit and should not be allowed.[2-a]

Where, in a suit for libel, the defendant applied at the time of trial to amend the written statement so as to include a plea of privilege, the application was disallowed on the ground that it would be unfair at that stage to allow the amendment.[3] An amendment of the written statement should, as a general rule, be refused when the plaintiff has called all his evidence on the issues of fact raised by the written statement and has closed his case,[4] unless the plaintiff is given an opportunity to call further evidence to rebut the new case set up.[5] A defendant, who has deliberately and under no mistake or misapprehension admitted a material fact in his written statement, cannot be allowed at a later stage to change his front and make out a new case by denying that fact.[6] But where in an ejectment suit the defendant pleaded exclusive possession and denied the plaintiff's title as landlord, and also set up a claim to be in possession under a mourasi lease granted by the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title, it was held that the effect of the alternative plea was merely to put the plaintiff to the proof of a title which would justify his prayer for ejectment and could, therefore, be allowed to be raised.[7] Again where on the facts appearing in the plaintiff's evidence a new defence of law arises, there is no reason why it should not be taken by way of amendment, even after the plaintiff has closed his case on the facts. Thus a plea that the suit is barred by virtue of S. 23 of the Contract Act was allowed to be raised in so far as it arose out of the plaintiff's evidence.[8]

5. Amendment taking away right accrued to a party by lapse of time. The object of the rule being to get at and try the merits of the case and to do substantial justice between the parties, no amendment will be allowed which will work injustice to one of the parties. The rule of conduct of the Court is, that "however, negligent or careless the first omission may have been, and however late the proposed amendment, the amendment should be allowed if it can be made without injustice to the other side."[1] One of the classes of cases in which an amendment will work injustice to the opposite party is where it takes away from a party a right accrued to him by lapse of time. As a rule, therefore, a plaintiff will not be allowed to amend his plaint by introducing a new cause of action, which, since the date of the plaint, has become barred by the statute of limitation.[2] In other words no amendment should be allowed as will take away a valid defence under the law of limitation.[3] Thus where a plaintiff, though entitled to various alternative reliefs sued only for one of the reliefs within the period of limitation, it was held that he should not be allowed to amend the plaint in such a way as to enforce his other reliefs which had become time barred at the date of the amendment.[4]

The rule, however, is not a universal one, and, under peculiar or special circumstances, an amendment may be allowed even where it has the effect of depriving the defendant of his right to plead limitation.[5] "That there was full

1. X sold several parcels of land to several persons, who did not however get possession. The title to the property was in some confusion and the plaintiff who was entitled to a right of pre-emption in respect of that sale, sued the vendees for a declaration of his right of pre-emption without asking for the consequential relief of pre-emption and possession as he was bound to do under S. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council, that the plaintiff was attempting to assert rights which he undoubtedly possessed, but through some clumsy blundering, in a form which the statute did not permit, and that the plaint should, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, be allowed to be amended by adding the relief of pre-emption, even though, at the time of the amendment, a fresh suit for pre-emption would be barred by limitation.[7]

2 S purchased certain property from P, the latter, however, remaining in possession and wrongfully receiving rents and mesne profits. S then sold the property to Y who sued P for possession and mesne profits adding S as a pro-forma plaintiff. In the plaint no relief was claimed in favour of S, the prayer being that a decree should be passed in favour of Y alone. An amendment of plaint for relief in favour of S for profits up to the date of the sale in favour of Y, was applied for, after the claim had been time barred. The High Court of Bombay held that there was no ground for suspecting that the plaintiffs had not acted in good faith and that under the peculiar circumstances of the case the amendment should be allowed.[8]

Where the plaintiff had used due diligence and care in framing his plaint but had made a mistake as to the appropriate remedy, he would be entitled to under the law, and the mistake was due to a conflict of judicial opinion on the point or to a subsequent change in the law, it was held in the undermentioned cases that the circumstances justified the allowing of an amendment even where a fresh suit would have been barred on the date of the amendment.[9] amendments is, that no amendment should be allowed if it causes injustice to the other side.[1] It is also a cardinal rule that "there is no injustice if the other side can be compensated with costs".[2] Two criteria must be kept in mind; does the amendment put the other party to a disadvantage or cause injury? And if so, can the disadvantage or injury be compensated by costs?[3] If it can be, then an amendment may be allowed.[3-a] If it cannot, the amendment should be refused.[3-b] Thus, for example, where the only inconvenience caused by the proposed amendment is to prolong the proceedings or to necessitate fresh evidence, the award of costs will be a sufficient compensation for the inconvenience caused.[4] A sued B for an injunction restraining him from executing his mortgage decree against certain properties on the ground, that the mortgage decree was obtained by fraud; subsequently he applied to amend the plaint by adding a new ground of claim, namely, that in any view his title was preferential to that of the defendant even apart from fraud. It was held that the amendment could be allowed on payment of costs.[5]

7. Amendment to be refused when the application is not in good faith. It is one of the necessary conditions for the exercise of the Court's discretion in allowing an amendment, that the applicant has acted in good faith.[1] While, therefore, as a general rule, leave to amend ought not to be refused if the applicant has acted bona fide,[2] it will be refused where he has been acting mala fide.[3] Courts will infer want of bona fides from great delay in applying for leave to amend.[4]

8. Amendment by adding or substituting a new plea of fraud.—Where fraud of one kind has been pleaded, an amendment introducing a new and distinct kind of fraud in substitution of the fraud pleaded, will not be allowed especially after all the evidence has been given.[1] "It is a well-known rule that a charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, and that when one kind of fraud is charged, another kind of fraud cannot, upon the failure of proof, be substituted for it."[2] The reason is that such a substitution will as a rule entirely change the character of the suit as originally laid. On the same principle where no fraud has, at all, been alleged in the original plaint, a new plea of fraud will not, except where strong grounds exist, be allowed to be raised by way of amendment.[3] In Bently v. Black,[4] Lord Esher, M. R., said: "It has long been the universal practice, except in most exceptional circumstances not to allow amendments for the purpose of adding a plea of fraud where fraud is not pleaded in the first instance". Where the fraud is disclosed only in the pleading of the defendant, or on his cross-examination, such a circumstance may justify an amendment by adding a new plea of fraud.[5] Thus where the plaintiff sued on a mortgage executed by the defendant, and the defendant pleaded that he was a minor on the date of the mortgage and that the mortgage was, therefore, void, the plaint was allowed to be amended by raising the plea that the defendant was guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation that he had attained majority at the time of the execution of the mortgage.[6] But the Court will, in every case, require to be satisfied about the truth, and substantiality, of the proposed amendment, and why the allegations were not originally made, before it grants the amendment.[7] Where, in a "passing off" action, the omission to refer to fraud in the plaint was due to an oversight and there were circumstances to show that the plaintiff intended from the very outset to allege fraud, it was held that, in the interests of justice, the amendment should be allowed.[8] Where the plaintiff sued for the recovery of a certain sum of money on the basis of his title by inheritance, and the defendant pleaded a sale of such right to himself, the plaint was allowed to be amended, by raising the plea that the sale was invalid owing to the fraud of the defendant.[9]

9. Amendment by adding new reliefs.—An alteration merely in the relief claimed in the suit, does not, as a general rule change the character of the suit, and an amendment seeking such alteration will be allowed if it does not cause injustice to the other side.[1] The same principle will apply to the addition of new reliefs in the plaint. Where a claim to which the plaintiff is entitled has been left out by a bona fide mistake, or by inadvertence, or on a misapprehension of facts, an amendment will be allowed by adding the claim so left out.[2] Where, however, the omission is a deliberate one, leave to amend will be refused.[3] Similarly where, by virtue of circumstances arising subsequent to the institution of the suit, the plaintiff becomes entitled to a larger or other relief than the one claimed, amendment may be allowed so as to add such other relief.[4] All reliefs ancillary to the main relief asked in the plaint, may be allowed to be added by way of amendment.[5] Thus where a mere declaration is asked for, an amendment by adding the appropriate consequential relief, may be allowed,[6] unless it appears that the suit has been deliberately framed as one for declaration for the purpose of avoiding the payment of Court-fee.[7] For instances where amendments were allowed altering the reliefs claimed, see the cases cited below.[8]

Where, however, the proposed amendment is likely to cause injustice to the other side, it will not be allowed. Thus where the application for leave to amend was made at a very late stage of the proceedings and the grant of the leave would have necessitated practically a trial of the whole case over again, it was held that leave should be refused.[9] Where the relief claimed by way of amendment was totally different from, and inconsistent with, the relief originally claimed, it was held by the High Court of Lahore that leave to amend should be refused.[10] In *Ardeshir H. plaintiff and the defendant . . . Indeed, so serious, in many cases is the exercise of this power, that, to their Lordships, it would appear to be a wise precaution for a Judge, before allowing any such amendment in a contested case, to require the plaint to be actually remodelled in a form appropriate to an action seeking compensation for breach of contract and nothing else."

10. Amendment by adding a new ground of relief.—The same principles as are applicable to cases of amendments by adding new reliefs, apply to amendments by adding new grounds of relief. Thus a new ground in support of the relief claimed cannot be said to alter the character of the suit and will as a general rule be allowed [1] Where the plaintiffs sued to set aside a scheme framed for them by the Hindu Religious Endowments Board, and the ground taken in the plaint was that there was no such mismanagement as would justify the Board under S. 63 of the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, in framing a scheme, it was held that an amendment giving another reason why the Board was precluded from interfering, (namely that the endowments were appropriated to uses, partly secular and partly religious and the Board had no power to interfere till the allocation was made (may be allowed.[2] Where the plaintiff stated in his plaint a certain ground upon which he intended to get over the bar of limitation, it was held that he ought not to be precluded from taking a not inconsistent ground by way of amendment, should he be later advised that the latter is the true ground.[3] In the undermentioned cases,[4] the plaintiff was allowed to amend his plaint by adding another ground even where he had adduced false evidence in support of his first ground.

11. "As may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy".—The main object of allowing amendments is to get at the rights of the parties,[1] and to avoid multiplicity of suits, where the dispute can be settled in the suit already instituted without unfairness or injustice to the other side.[2] "However the necessity to amend may have arisen, leave to amend should always be given and at any stage in the proceedings in order to allow the real question at issue between the parties to be raised on the pleadings unless the party applying for leave has acted in bad faith or the amendment will cause some injury to the opposite party for which he cannot be fully compensated by costs or otherwise.''[3] Thus where the properties in the plaint are wrongly described[4] or some properties are omitted from the plaint by inadvertence,[5] or where there is a mistake in the statement of the cause of action[6] or a bona fide mistake in making the necessary averments in the plaint[6-a] or in drawing up the pleadings[7] or the suit is brought under a wrong Act,[8] an amendment will be allowed to rectify the omission or mistake. O. 6, R. 17, Note 11.

But the ''questions in controversy between the parties'' which have to be brought out clearly and decided are, save in exceptional cases, the questions in controversy between the parties when the parties joined issue, that is when the defendant puts in his written statement; they do not include new questions which the defendant neither wished nor intended then to dispute, but which, at a later stage in the proceedings, either because he has changed his mind, or because something has happened after he filed his written statement, he thinks it profitable to dispute.[9] An amendment which will be useless if made, as for instance, an amendment setting up a claim or defence which is bad in law,[10] or an amendment which, if allowed, would still leave the claim or defence as amended unsupportable,[11] cannot be said to be necessary for the purpose of determining the real question in controversy in the suit. Again, a merely technical plea, cannot be said to be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties, and therefore it was held that it should not be allowed to be set up by way of amendment.[12]

12. Amendment by introducing new cause of action.—It has been seen in Note 3, ante that there is a limitation on the wide powers of the Court to amend pleadings namely that the Court cannot, by way of amendment, substitute one distinct cause of action for another.[1-a] Where the plaintiff sued for specific performance of a contract alleged to have been entered into by the defendant with him in 1912, and on his failure to establish the alleged contract, sought to amend the plaint by setting up another and independent contract of 1903, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that such amendment could not be allowed. Their Lordships said "when once the contract has been negatived, to permit the plaintiff to set up another and an altogether independent contract would, in their Lordships' opinion, be to go outside the provisions established by the Code of Civil Procedure, to which reference has been made. It would be a regrettable thing, if when in fact the whole of the controversy between two parties was properly open, rigid rules prevent its determination, but in this case their Lordships think that the rules do have the operation and that it was not open to the Court to permit a new case to be made."[1] In the following instances amendments were refused as introducing a new and distinct cause of action:—

(1) Claim on the basis of Kittima adoption; amendment into claim based on apathitha adoption.[2]

(2) Claim based on negligence; amendment into claim based on nuisance.[3]

(8) Plaintiff suing alleging right to sue on behalf of a certain committee; on failing to establish such right, amendment by adding as parties persons who had such right.[10]

Where in answer to an application for amendment, it is alleged that such amendment would change the cause of action, the Court must look to the substantial nature of the claim and not to the formal manner in which it is inserted.[11] A mere change in the date of the cause of action,[12] or the correction of a clerical error,[13] or amendments to disclose further details of a fact which support or amplify a cause of action already sued on,[14] cannot be said to introduce such a distinct cause of action as will entail a rejection of the application for amendment. Thus where the plaintiff sued to set aside a sale, on the ground that the defendants had taken advantage of his youth, he having just attained majority, and afterwards applied to amend the plaint by adding that on the date of the sale he was a minor, it was held that the amendment was merely for the purpose of amplifying and developing the original cause of action and should be allowed.[15] Similarly a plaint could be amended by putting in the necessary ground of exemption from limitation for the suit, such as an acknowledgment of liability.[16] Where in respect of an original liability to pay a certain sum money, a document such as a promissory note, or a mortgage is taken and the plaintiff in a suit on such document finds that the document is inadmissible in evidence owing to some technical defect, an amendment of the plaint by claiming relief as on the basis of the original liability does not, as a general rule, amount to a substitution of a distinct cause of action, and should therefore, be allowed.[17] Again, where subsequent to the institution of the suit by the plaintiff, events happen which give the plaintiff a new cause of action for the relief claimed or the right to a new or additional relief, he will as a general rule be allowed to amend the plaint by moulding it in an appropriate manner.[17-a] Thus where the plaintiff sues to redeem a particular mortgage, and the defendant denies that mortgage but sets up another mortgage, the plaintiff may be allowed to amend the plaint by claiming relief on the basis of that mortgage,[18] except where the plaintiff is guilty of mala fides.[19] But where the cause of action is foreign to the original cause of action on which the suit was brought, the amendment cannot be allowed. Thus where A, the endorsee of a promissory note sued B on the note, and it was found that the note was void as infringing the Paper Currency Act, and the plaintiff thereupon obtained an assignment of the original obligation and applied to add this cause of action, it was held that it could not be allowed inasmuch as the cause of action based on the assignment of the original obligation was quite distinct from the cause of action based on the assignment of the promissory note itself.[20] On the question if Courts can give relief on a cause of action accruing after the institution of the suit, see Note 4 to O. 7, R. 7, infra.

13. "At any stage of the proceedings."—Under the old Code a plaint could only be returned for amendment in certain cases specified, at or before the settlement of issues.[1] The Court could also at any time before judgment amend the plaint.[2] The present rule now makes it clear that the amendment can be made at any stage of the proceedings.[3] It may thus be allowed before, or at, or after the trial, or in appeal,[4] or in second appeal,[5] or in revision,[6] or

14. Opportunity to be given to the opposite party to amend his pleading.—Where a pleading is allowed to be amended, an opportunity should be afforded to the opposite side to meet the new case by filing any additional written statement or letting in such further evidence as may be necessary.[1] The Court cannot, however, ask the defendant to file an additional written statement without first asking the plaintiff to set forth his amendment and deciding that the amendment was necessary.[2]

15. "On such terms as may be just".—These words give the judge an unfettered discretion as to the terms to be imposed in granting an amendment of the pleadings.[1] As a general rule an amendment will only be allowed on the terms that the cost of the application for leave to amend, and of the costs occasioned by, and in consequence of, the amendment shall be paid by the party amending, in any event.[2] The terms should be such as will prevent the opposite party from being prejudiced by the amendment.[3]

It is not necessary that the Court should impose terms as to costs only; it may impose such terms as it deems necessary and just.[4]

An order directing a plaintiff to pay in cash the costs of amendment of the plaint after he has been found to be a pauper is not proper.[5] Where a party accepts costs under an order which, but for the order, would not at that time be payable, he cannot afterwards object that the order ought not to have been made.[6]

O. 6, R. 17, Notes 16—19.

16. How amendments should be made.—Under the old Code, the plaint could be returned for amendment in certain cases specified.[1] Under the present Code it would seem, that the pleading should not be returned for amendment, but is to be kept on the Court's file with direction to the parties to amend, if necessary.[2] Where, however, the Court has no pecuniary jurisdiction to entertain the suit the Court should under the provisions of O. 7, R. 10 of the Code return the plaint to the plaintiff, who may amend it by deleting certain reliefs claimed, and represent the same to the Court.[3]

It is not, however, essential that the amendment should be made on the face of the plaint itself; it may be made even on a separate piece of paper.[4]

17. Who can apply for amendment.—Where a suit is instituted by two plaintiffs, it is doubtful whether one of them alone can apply for amendment of the plaint.[1]

18. Extent of amendment.—A plaintiff can amend his plaint only to the extent allowed by the Court. Thus where a plaint was ordered to be amended by addition of parties and the plaintiff altered the relief claimed also, it was held that the plaint must be taken as originally framed even though the unauthorised amendment as to relief is not objected to either by the Court or by the other party.[1]

There is a difference of opinion as to whether a Court can allow an amendment which has the effect of ousting its own jurisdiction over the suit. The High Court of Madras has held that it cannot[2] while the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court holds a contrary view.[3]

19. Effect of amendment and limitation.—Where, in a suit against several defendants the Court could not take cognisance of the claim as against some of the defendants, and in consequence thereof the plaintiff amends his plaint by restricting his claim only as against the other defendants, the effect of the amendment is, as if the suit had never been commenced in respect of the former.[1]

Where an amendment is allowed, under this rule, such amendment relates back to the date of the suit as originally filed.[2] But where the plaint in a suit for possession of certain plots of land was subsequently amended by the inclusion of certain other plots, it is not a case of amendment properly so called, but a case of an addition of entirely new lands and as regards such lands the suit will date only from the day when the claim was made in respect thereof.[3]

20. Appeal.—Under the old Code orders returning plaints for amendment were appealable under Cl. 6 of S. 588.[1] But no appeal lay from orders for amendment passed by the Court itself under Cl. (c) of S. 53.[2] Under the present Code no appeal lies from an order granting or refusing an amendment under this rule.[3] Nor will an appellate Court, in an appeal from the decree in the suit, interfere with the discretion of the lower Court in granting or refusing amendments.[4] Where the defendants do not take objection to the amendment, they will be deemed to have waived it and cannot raise it again at the stage of appeal.[4-a]

An order refusing leave to amend a plaint is in the nature of an interlocutory order and is not appealable under the Letters Patent as a 'Judgment.'[5] Nor is an order amending the title of a plaint by omitting the word "summary" and transferring the case to the short cause list, a "judgment" within Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.[6]

Synopsis.

O. 6, R. 18, Note 1.

1. Failure to amend after order.

Amendment order otherwise than under this rule—Fourteen days rule, if applies. See Note 1, Pt. (4) and F.-N. (4).

1. Failure to amend after order.—Under Ss. 53 and 54 of the Code of 1877, the Court could reject a plaint if the party failed to comply with the order for amendment.[1] There is no such provision under this Code and the only consequence of the failure to amend within time would be, that he cannot amend his pleading afterwards, unless the time is extended by the Court.[2] This rule does not prohibit a fresh suit being brought on the same cause of action when the amendment has not been made in time.[3] Where the order of amendment is made, not under this Order, but under some other provision of law, the provision that the amendment must be made within 14 days where no time is fixed, does not apply.[4]

The Court has a discretion to extend the time even after the expiry of the period originally fixed[5] and no appeal will lie against an order admitting an amended plaint after the time fixed.[6]

1. Legislative changes.—

1. The word "shall" has been substituted for "must" in the opening sentence. See Note 3.

2. In clause (e) of this rule, the word "facts" has been substituted for the words "a plain and concise statement of the circumstances", occurring in the old section. See Note 6.

3. Clauses (d), (f) and (h) are new.

2. Plaint in General.—As has been seen in Note 3 to S. 26 ante, a plaint has been held to mean "a private memorial tendered to a Court in which the person sets forth his cause of action; the exhibition of an action in writing". It corresponds to the "statement of claim" in England and its object is to state the grounds upon which the plaintiff seeks the assistance of the Court to grant him relief.[1]

Order 7, Rule 1—Note 2.

(1) See cases cited in Note 3 to S 26.

Order 6 lays down generally, what pleadings (i.e., plaint or written statement) should contain, and this order lays down in particular, the requirements of a plaint. Every plaint, therefore, should comply with the rules contained in Orders 6 and 7, so far as they are applicable. Thus:— O. 7, R. 1, Note 2.

(1) It should contain the name of the Court in which the suit is brought (O. 7, R. 1-a).

(2) It should contain the (a) name, (b) description, and (c) place of residence of—

(i) The plaintiff (O. 7, R. 1-b).

(ii) The defendant so far as can be ascertained (O. 7, R. 1-c).

(3) Where the plaintiff or defendant is a minor or a person of unsound mind it should contain a statement to that effect (O. 7, R. 1-d).

(4) Where the plaintiff sues in a representative capacity, it should show not only that he has an existing interest in the subject-matter, but that he has taken necessary steps to enable him to institute a suit, concerning it (O. 7, R. 4).

(5) It should state in a concise form the material facts on which the plaintiff relies for his claim (O. 6, R. 2).

(i) It should set out the facts constituting the cause of action (O. 7, R. 1-e). When necessary it should be divided into paragraphs numbered consecutively—all dates numbers and sums to be expressed in figures (O. 6, R. 2).

(ii) The forms given in Appendix A to the Code, or similar forms, should be used as far as possible (O. 6, R. 3).

(iii) If the plaintiff pleads misrepresentation, fraud, breach of trust, wilful default, undue influence, etc., and in all cases where particulars may be necessary beyond those as are exemplified in the forms aforesaid, it should contain the particulars with dates and items, if necessary (O. 6, R. 4).

(iv) If a party relies on illegality or insufficiency in law of any contract, that party should plead such illegality or insufficiency in law in his pleading; it is not sufficient simply to deny the contract (O. 6, R. 8).

(v) Whenever the contents of a document are material, it is sufficient to state the effect thereof as briefly as possible without setting out the whole or any part thereof, unless the precise words are material (O. 6, R. 9).

(vi) Whenever it is material to allege malice, fraudulent intention, knowledge or any condition of mind of any person, it is sufficient to allege it as a fact, without setting out the circumstances from which it is inferred (O. 6, R. 10).

(6) If the suit is for the recovery of money, it should state the precise amount claimed, and when the plaintiff has allowed a set-off or relinquished a portion of his claim, the amount so relinquished or so allowed should be stated (O. 7, R. 1-h); but in suits for accounts or for mesne profits, it should state the approximate amount sued for (O. 7, R. 2).

(7) If the subject-matter of the suit is immoveable property, it should contain a description thereof sufficient to identify it, i.e., boundaries or survey numbers thereof, should be specified (O. 7, R. 3).

(8) Where the plaintiff seeks relief in respect of several distinct claims or causes of action founded on separate and distinct grounds, he should state them as far as possible separately and distinctly (O. 7, R. 8).

(9) It should state the interest of the defendant in the subject-matter and his liability to answer the plaintiff's demands (O. 7, R. 5).

(10) It should state when and where the cause of action arose.

(i) It should state (if necessary) the facts showing that the Court has jurisdiction (O. 7, R. 1-f).

(ii) If it is presented after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed, it should show the grounds of exemption from the law of limitation (O. 7, R. 6).

(11) It should contain a statement of the value of the subject-matter of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction and of Court-fees, so far as the case admits (O. 7, R. 1-i).

(12) It should state specifically the relief which the plaintiff claims, either simply or in the alternative; it is not necessary to ask for general or other relief which may always be given as the Court may think just (O. 7, R. 7).

(13) It should be verified at the foot by the party or by one of the parties pleading, or by some other person proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case (O. 6, R. 15).

A suit is instituted by the presentation of a plaint to the Court or to such officer at it may appoint in this behalf, (O. 4, R. 1) but cannot be said to be duly instituted until it is admitted and registered as a suit (see Note 2 to S. 26). The Court may return a plaint for presentation to the proper Court at any stage (O. 7, R. 10) or reject it on any of the grounds mentioned in O. 7, R. 11, (see O. 7, R. 11, infra).

The provisions of this order are made applicable to plaints presented under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act,[2] The Madras Estates Land Act,[3] The Agra Tenancy Act,[4] The Oudh Rent Act,[5] The Orissa Tenancy Act[6] and the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act.[7]

3. Scope of the Rule.—See Note 2 above. The provisions of this rule are imperative.[1] The substitution of the word "shall" in the place of "must" in the opening sentence has not affected any change in the law.

4. Name, description and place of residence.—The object of the legislature is to secure correct particulars regarding the parties so far as they can be ascertained, so that there may be no uncertainty with regard to the identity of the parties. The full description of the party and the character in which he sues or is sued should be given in the plaint. The word "description" includes the age, father's name[1] and other particulars that may be necessary to identify the person. Thus the titles by which the defendant is generally known should be also given.[2] As to the effect of misdescription of parties see Note 37, O. 1, R. 10, supra.

The place of residence of the plaintiff should be accurately given,[3] and that of the defendant should be given as accurately as can be ascertained; it is not sufficient to make vague statements as to the defendant's place of residence such as "carrying on business in Calcutta"[4] or formerly in Calcutta now residing in Kashmir".[5] If the plaintiff after enquiry is unable to ascertain these particulars fully, he should include a paragraph in the plaint to that effect.[6] It is not sufficient to give these particulars in the cause title of the plaint, as the cause title is not covered by the verification of the particulars in the plaint.[7]

5. Party—a minor or person of unsound mind.—See Order 32, infra.

6. Facts constituting the cause of action.—The words " plain and concise statement of the circumstances" occurring in the old section have been substituted by the word "facts" in view of the specific provisions of O. 6, R. 2.

As to what are material facts see O. 6, R. 2, supra. As to the meaning of the words cause of action See Note 14 to S. 20, supra.

Every suit presupposes the existence of a cause of action against the defendant for, if there is no cause of action at all, the plaint will have to be rejected under rule 11, infra.

Where there is no such right in law as that claimed, there can be no cause of action in respect thereof, and a suit cannot be based thereon. See Note 41 to S. 9 and the undermentioned cases.[1]

7. When cause of action arose.—It is necessary for the plaintiff to state specifically when the cause of action for the suit arose.[1] This is necessary for the purpose of enabling the Court or the defendant to ascertain from the plaint whether there is a cause of action, and whether it is not barred by the law of limitation.[2] But the statement need not be made in a separate paragraph, if it is clear from the other facts alleged in the plaint.[3]

O. 7, R. 1, Notes 7—11.

8. "Facts showing that the Court has jurisdiction".—All the facts showing that the Court has jurisdiction should be set out in the plaint, and if any special jurisdiction vested in the Court by law is invoked, all the facts which call for the exercise of that jurisdiction should be set out.[1] When the jurisdiction of the Court to try the suit is disputed, the Court must decide the same preliminary to the adjudication of the suit itself.[2] As to the statement of facts showing the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court, see Note 11 below.

9. "Relief which the plaintiff claims."—See Order 7, Rule 7 infra.

10. "Where the plaintiff has allowed a set-off or relinquished a portion of his claim".—The amount set-off or relinquished should be specified with precision, or at least should be stated in such a manner that the amount may be inferred from the other allegations in the plaint.[1]

11. Valuation of Suit.—The plaintiff should distinctly state in the plaint, the valuation of the suit for the purposes of Court-fees and of jurisdiction. As the two valuations may not be the same in several cases, they have to be stated specifically. Where the plaintiff claims reliefs arising out of the same cause of action, he can state the aggregate value of his reliefs, but if he claims reliefs in respect of two or more distinct causes of action, he should state the valuation of each cause of action separately, as the Court-fee is separately payable in respect of each.[1] Where the plaintiff claims relief in the alternative, he should also state his valuations in respect of the two reliefs, and the Court-fee is payable on the value of the larger relief.[2]

The valuation of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction is necessary for the purpose of ascertaining whether the suit is within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court. The plaintiff should, however, state the true value at which the subject-matter of the suit ought to be valued;[3] it should not be arbitrary or fanciful.[4] See also Note 4 to S. 6 and Notes 7 to 10 to S. 15, ante.

1. Scope of the rule.
2. Mesne profits.
3. Accounts.
4. Suit for damages.

Suit for money. See Note 1, Pt. (1).

1. Scope of the rule.—In a suit for the recovery of money, the plaint should, as a rule, state the amount claimed precisely.[1] But in a suit for mesne profits or for an amount which will be found due to the plaintiff on taking unsettled accounts between him and the defendant, in which the plaintiff is not, at the time of the institution of the suit, in a position to give the amount precisely, he should state it approximately. The value is given tentatively, as the correct value is ascertained only in the course of the suit (O. 20, Rr. 12, 16 and 17).

2. Mesne profits.—The expression "mesne profits" has been defined in S. 2 (12).

A plaintiff may claim in a suit, past mesne profits, i.e., mesne profits accruing up to the date of institution of the suit, and future mesne profits from the date of institution up to the delivery of possession. The valuation in the plaint, should, under this rule, be only with reference to the amount of the past mesne profits claimed.[1]

The future mesne profits, need not be valued, since it is impossible to give even an approximate statement of the amount.[2] But the valuation of the past mesne profits given will be the valuation of the "amount sued for" under this rule,[3] and is the valuation for the purposes of jurisdiction (see S. 6 and S. 96, Note 18, supra).

3. Accounts.—A suit for money which will be found to be due on taking accounts, is instituted when the defendant is under a legal obligation to render accounts which the plaintiff is not in a position to ascertain.[1] In such cases this rule requires that the plaintiff should state approximately the amount which will be found due to him on taking unsettled accounts between him and the defendant.[2] The approximation required under sub-rule (2) may be a rough and ready approximation such as the plaintiff is able to give.[3] The valuation given by the plaintiff is purely tentative, and is the valuation for the purposes of jurisdiction (see S. 6, supra).

As to the ascertainment of the amount due in a suit for accounts see O. 20, Rr. 16 and 17, infra and S. 11 of the Court Fees Act.

4. Suit for damages.—It has been held that in a suit for damages based on fraud, the plaintiff may give an approximate valuation in the plaint and offer to pay additional Court fees in case a larger amount is found due, before the decree is passed, as S. 11 of the Court Fees Act, will not apply to such a case.[1]

A plaintiff suing in a representative capacity should set it out clearly in the plaint and show that he is qualified to do so.[1] The plaint should show that the plaintiff has an actual existing interest in the subject-matter, and the representation must be based on some authority legally expressed; the plaintiffs must further, be capable in law of representing the persons whom they profess to bind.[2] The Court has no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon a right when there has been no proper representation of the interests in litigation.[3] As to who are proper representatives in particular cases see below.[4]

3. "Has taken the steps necessary to enable him to institute the suit". Under S. 212 of the Succession Act, (39 of 1925) it is provided that letters of administration should be obtained to establish any right to the property of a person dying intestate, in cases to which that section applies. The administrator, in such cases derives his title solely under the grant of the letters of administration and, until such grant is made, he has no title to the estate of the deceased; he cannot, therefore, institute an action as Administrator before he gets the grant.[1] The plaint should, therefore, state that the plaintiff has obtained the letters of administration. But where a person dies leaving a will, the executor derives his title and authority from the will of the testator and not from any grant of probate; he may, therefore, institute a suit as executor before obtaining a probate, though he may not be entitled to a decree unless he produces a probate,[2] in as much as the production of the probate is the only way in which he is allowed by law to prove his title.[3] Similarly it is not necessary for a person claiming on succession to the effects of a deceased person, to obtain a succession certificate before instituting a suit for the recovery of a debt due to the deceased, though no decree will be passed before the production thereof.[4] The obtaining of a probate or of a succession certificate in such cases is not a "step necessary to enable the plaintiff to institute the suit" and consequently it is not necessary to allege in the plaint that the plaintiff has obtained the probate or the certificate.

This rule, however, applies only to the institution of suits and does not prohibit the continuing of the suit already filed, by the legal representatives of a plaintiff dying during the pendency of the suit, provided the representative capacity is established before decree.[5]

4. Probate and Letters of Administration.—See Note 3 above.

Sections 212 and 213 of the Indian Succession Act, provide that probate and Letters of Administration are necessary to establish any right to the property in cases to which the section applies; but the sections are expressly made inapplicable to particular cases and in those cases, a plaintiff may commence any action without a probate or letters of administration. See Notes 5—8 below. A probate issued from a Native Court is not sufficient for instituting a suit in British India.[1] Where a probate is not produced, the Court should grant time to the plaintiff to produce the probate, and not dismiss the suit.[2]

5. Hindus.—As regards Hindu wills, probate is necessary under S. 213 of the Indian Succession Act, only if the wills are of the class mentioned below:—

(1) If the will is made on or after the 1st September 1870, within the territories which, on that date, were subject to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal or were within the Local limits of ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Courts of Judicature at Madras and Bombay.

(2) If the will is made outside those territories or limits, but relates to immoveable property situate within those territories or limits.

Therefore, it is not obligatory on executors or legatees under other wills to take out probate or letters of administration (with copy of will annexed,) to establish their rights in a Court of law.[1]

Where a Hindu dies intestate it is not necessary to obtain letters of administration to the estate of the deceased, (see S. 212, sub-S. 2 of the Indian Succession Act).[2]

If the suit is to recover a debt due to the deceased, it is necessary that a probate, or letters of administration or a succession certificate should be produced, as otherwise no decree can be passed, (see S. 214 of the Indian Succession Act).

6. Mahomedans.—In the case of Mahomedans, it is not necessary to obtain a probate or letters of administration.[1] See Ss. 212 and 213 of the Indian Succession Act. But it is, however, necessary, if the suit is for the recovery of a debt due to the deceased, to produce a probate or letters of administration or succession certificate, (see S. 214 of the Indian Succession Act)[2] as above.

7. Indian Christians.—"Indian Christian" has been defined to mean a native of India, who is or in good faith claims to be of unmixed Asiatic descent and who professes any form of the Christian religion.[1] Till the passing of the Native Christian Administration of Estates Act, 1901,[2] the Indian Christians were governed by the Indian Succession Act, (1865) and, therefore, if the deceased died intestate, letters of administration were necessary and in case the deceased left a will, a probate of the will was necessary to establish any right to his property.[3] But the Native Christian Administration of Estates Act provided that S. 190 of the Indian Succession Act shall not apply to the property of an Indian Christian who died intestate, and though a probate was still necessary in the case of a will, no letters of administration were necessary in the case of intestacy. The law is the same since the passing of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, wherein S. 212 provides that no letters of administration are necessary to establish any right to any part of the property of the deceased. A probate, however, is necessary in the case of a will. A succession certificate is necessary in a suit to recover a debt due to deceased as above (S. 214).

8. Europeans, Parsees, Jews and Armenians.—These cases are governed by the provisions of S. 212 (1) and S. 213 (1) of the Indian Succession Act, and, therefore, it is necessary to obtain, a probate or letters of administration as the case may be to establish any right in a Court of law.[1] O. 7, R. 4, Notes 8—11.

9. Succession certificate.—In a suit for recovery of a debt due to a deceased person, the person claiming on succession to the effects of the deceased should produce a probate, or letters of administration, or a succession certificate having the debt specified therein, as otherwise no decree can be passed under S. 214 of the Indian Succession Act. But if the debt is a joint family debt and the plaintiff claims by survivorship, no succession certificate is necessary.[1] As to the other cases where succession certificate is not necessary, see foot-note below.[2] As to what is a "suit for debt" for the purposes of S. 214 of the Act, see Notes 10 and 11, below.

10. Suits for rent.—The word "debt" in section 214 (1) of the Indian Succession Act does not include rent, revenue or profits in respect of land used for agricultural purposes [see S. 214 (2)] and, therefore, no succession certificate is necessary to recover rent for agricultural land.[1] The amount of the decree for rent, deposited by defendant in Court, is still rent and can be withdrawn without a succession certificate by the legal representatives of deceased decree-holder.[2]

11. Suit for debt.—Under S. 214 of the Indian Succession Act, the Court cannot pass a decree against a debtor of the deceased in favour of a person claiming on succession to be entitled to the effects of the deceased except on production of a succession certificate, etc. As to what is a suit for debt, see Note 10 above and the undermentioned cases.[1]

Synopsis.

1. Defendant's interest and liability.

1. Defendant's interest and liability.—This rule makes it necessary that the plaintiff should show the interest of the defendant in the subject-matter of the suit and his liability to meet the plaintiff's demand.[1] If the defendant is sued in a representative capacity, it is incumbent on the plaintiff to state the capacity in which the plaintiff seeks to make him liable, as otherwise any decree passed will bind no more than the defendant's individual interest.[2] As to the liability of the defendant in particular cases, see below.[3]

R. 6. [S. 50, Para. 6.] Where the suit is instituted after the expiration of the period prescribed by the law of limitation, the plaint shall show the ground upon which exemption from such law is claimed.

Ground of exemption from limitation law.

[1859—S. 26. See Ss. 12 to 20 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908.]

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.
2. "The plaint shall show."

Exemption from limitation—Grounds of. See Note 2.

Omission to show grounds of exemption—Effect. See Note 1.

1. Scope of the rule.—Where, but for some ground of exemption from the law of limitation, a suit would prima facie be barred by limitation, it is necessary for the plaintiff to show in the plaint such ground of exemption.[1] If no such ground is shown in the plaint, it is liable to be rejected under O. 7, R. 11 (d), infra. The plaintiff will not be allowed to show the ground of exemption at the trial by putting in evidence any documents, such as acknowledgments of liability.[2] But the Court may, save in exceptional circumstances, allow the plaint to be amended by making the necessary allegations.[3]

2. "The plaint shall show."—It is sufficient that the ground of exemption is apparent on the face of the plaint. It is not necessary that the plaint should specifically, and in so many words, claim the ground of exemption. Thus where the fact of minority is apparent on the face of the record it is not necessary that the ground of exemption under S. 8 of the Limitation Act should be specifically pleaded.[1] Similarly, where a plaint is presented on the re-opening date after Court-holidays and the period of limitation has expired during the holidays, the fact that the ground of exemption under S. 4 of the Limitation Act was not specifically mentioned in the plaint will not entail the dismissal of the suit, inasmuch as the Court is bound to take judicial notice of the holidays.[2] On the same principle it has been held that where a plaint, presented to a wrong Court, is returned for presentation to the proper Court, the endorsements on the plaint will show the applicability of S. 14 of the Limitation Act, and that therefore it is not necessary to specifically allege that ground of exemption.[3] All that the rule requires is that the plaints should show a ground of exemption from limitation where the suit is instituted after the expiration of the period of limitation. But once that is shown, the rule does not preclude the plaintiff from relying upon a new ground of exemption at the trial. According to the High Court of Bombay, however, the new ground taken should be not inconsistent with that taken originally,[4] while, according to the Calcutta,[5] and Lahore,[6] High Courts and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur,[7] the new ground may even be inconsistent with the original one. But where the plaintiff once amends his plaint by relying upon a new ground of exemption, it has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council, that he will not, thereafter, be allowed to rely upon the original allegation in the unamended plaint.[8] O. 7, R. 6, Note 2.

A plaintiff will not be allowed to rely upon a ground of exemption from limitation for the first time in appeal.[9] The appellate Court has the same powers of rejection of plaint as the trial Court, under O. 7, R. 11 (d).[10] Similarly a defendant will not be allowed to raise objections on the ground of failure to set out the grounds of exemption, for the first time in appeal or revision.[11]

This rule applies only to cases where the plaint is barred prima facie[12] and, therefore, a plaintiff is not precluded from relying upon a ground of exemption from limitation, if, on the facts found, the plaintiff's claim appears to be barred.[13] The plaintiff has to show that his cause of action accrued within the period of limitation.[14] may always be given as the Court may think just to the same extent as if it had been asked for. And the same rule shall apply to any relief claimed by the defendant in his written statement.

Synopsis.

1. Relief.
2. General or other relief.
3. Alternative relief.
4. Events happening after suit.

Court's power to grant relief not founded on pleadings. See Note 1, Pt. (4).

Relief to be specifically stated. See Note 1.

1. Relief.—This rule and O. 2, R. 2, sub-Rule 3 should be read together, and so reading them, the following general propositions may be deduced:—

(1) If the plaintiff, being entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action, omits to sue for any one of such reliefs, he shall not afterwards sue for any relief so omitted.

(2) Every plaint shall state specifically the relief which the plaintiff claims, either simply, or in the alternative.

(3) But a general or other relief need not, however, be specifically asked for, but may be given by the Court as if it had been asked for.

Where a question arises as to whether a plaintiff has asked for a particular relief in his plaint, the whole of the plaint must be considered,[1] and the substance and not merely the form of the plaint should be looked to.[2] But this liberality of construction is subject to the limit that the facts and documents which entitle the plaintiff to the relief claimed must be stated or referred to in his pleading. In Mahomed Zahoor Ali Khan v. Mt. Thakooranee Rutta Koer,[3] their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows:—

"Though the committee is always disposed to give a liberal construction to pleadings in Indian Courts so as to allow every question fairly arising on the case made by the pleadings to be raised and discussed in the suit, yet this liberality of construction must have some limit. A plaintiff cannot be entitled to relief upon facts and documents not stated or referred to by him in his pleadings."

In Sri Mahant Govind Rao v. Sita Ram Kesho,[4] their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that the general rule that a plaintiff cannot be entitled to relief upon facts and documents not stated or referred to by him in his pleadings, does not apply where the substantial matters which constitute the title of all the parties are touched in the issues and have been fully put in evidence in the case. Relief can be granted in such cases on the basis of such matters. O. 7, R. 7, Note 1.

It follows from what has been said above that no relief can be granted upon facts and documents not disclosed in the pleadings, nor dealt with by the issues or the evidence in the case.[5] Thus where the plaintiff asks for a particular relief on a specific ground, he cannot be granted the same relief on a different ground which is not at all disclosed in the plaint.[6] A plaintiff suing for a declaration of title to a certain property under a sale-deed executed in his favour, cannot succeed on the ground of adverse possession if the facts in support of that ground are not disclosed in the plaint.[7] But where a ground of relief is disclosed in the plaint, the fact that the plaintiff asked for the relief on a different ground will not disentitle him to relief on the ground disclosed in the pleading.[8]

Where a plaintiff claims a larger relief than he is entitled to, the suit should not be dismissed on that ground, but the plaintiff should be given the relief he is entitled to[9] unless the ground on which the lesser relief can be granted is inconsistent with the case of the plaintiff as set out in his pleadings or would lead to a determination of the issues which would embarrass the defendant.[10] Nor is it a ground for dismissing a suit that groundless charges of fraud are made against the plaintiff, provided he has a good cause of action.[11] But a Court cannot grant a larger relief than that claimed, even if the plaintiff is really entitled to it, unless the plaintiff gets the plaint amended with the leave of the Court.[12]

Where the plaintiff has omitted to ask for the appropriate reliefs, he may apply for amendment of the plaint by inserting a prayer for the grant of such reliefs.[13] See O. 6, R. 17.

A Court will not grant any relief which it cannot enforce[14] or which is useless and unprofitable to the parties.[15]

2. General or other reliefs.—As has been seen in Note 1, ante, a general or other relief need not be specifically asked for in the plaint, but can always be granted by the Court as if it had been asked for. Where, from mistake, or inadvertence the plaintiff omits to pray for the proper relief, or, if the relief claimed in the plaint is not wholly sufficient or appropriate, the Court has always the power to grant the proper relief according to the circumstances of the case.[1] Thus a Court can always award future interest on the sum found to be due to the plaintiff even though the latter has not claimed it.[2] The Court may in a suit for exclusive possession pass a decree for joint possession.[3] Similarly in a suit for sale of mortgaged property the Court may pass a personal decree against the mortgagor-defendant provided the personal covenant is not barred by limitation.[4]

But the power to grant such relief is controlled by the following considerations:— O. 7, R. 7, Note 2.

(1) The relief granted should be based on facts stated or referred to in the plaint and should not be inconsistent with the case set up by the plaintiff[5] or with the relief claimed by him.[6] Thus the Court cannot pass a decree for the possession of the property in a suit for confirmation of possession, inasmuch as the relief of possession is not consistent with the case set up by the plaintiff or with the relief claimed by him.[7] Similarly in a suit for injunction on the basis of title, the Court cannot declare that the plaintiff is entitled to a right of easement.[8] For other illustrations, see the under-mentioned cases.[9]

(2) The relief granted should be based on the same cause of action as the relief claimed in the suit.[10]

(3) The relief granted to the plaintiff should not be of an entirely different description from the relief claimed in the plaint. The plaintiff "cannot desert the specific relief claimed and, under the general prayer, ask a relief of another description, unless the facts and circumstances of the case, consistently with the rules of the Court, maintain that relief".[11] Thus an injunction will not ordinarily be granted under the power to grant general relief.[12] "It must be expressly prayed because the defendant might by his answer make a different case under the general prayer from what he would if an injunction were specifically prayed."[13] The test therefore in such cases is to see whether the defendant will not be taken by surprise or be embarrassed by such relief being granted.[14] There can be no surprise if the relief granted is consistent with that claimed and with the case raised in the pleadings[15] or if the parties knew the case which had to be tried.[16] Thus a declaratory decree may be passed in a suit for possession of property[17] or a decree for ejectment may be made in a suit for partition,[18] provided there is no surprise under the circumstances of the case, to the defendants. Similarly damages may be awarded in addition to a decree for specific performance[19] or an account directed to be taken in a suit for money.[20] But the Court cannot pass a decree for a general taking of accounts of a partnership in a suit to recover plaintiff's share alone in one item of the partnership assets,[21] nor can it, in a personal claim pass a decree for sale of property in default of the payment of the sum decreed.[22] Where a reversioner sues a Hindu widow for an injunction restraining her from committing waste and for the appointment of a receiver, he is not entitled to a declaration of his reversionary right if he fails to establish his right to the reliefs claimed.[23]

The Court cannot, under the power to grant further relief pass a decree in favour of a pro forma plaintiff if it is found that the real plaintiff is not entitled to the relief claimed.[24]

O. 7, R. 7, Notes 2—3.

The equitable relief under this rule may be granted even by the appellate Court,[25] though it will be slow to interfere with the discretion exercised by the trial Court in granting appropriate relief under this rule.[26]

3. Alternative Relief.—"A person may rely upon one set of facts if he can succeed in proving them, and he may rely upon another set of facts if he can succeed in proving them.[1] Thus a plaintiff may claim specific performance of a contract or, in the alternative, cancellation of the contract and damages.[2] In a suit based on a sale-deed the plaintiff may, in the alternative, claim refund of the consideration paid if the sale-deed becomes unenforceable.[3] Similarly a plaintiff may in a suit on a negotiable instrument, claim in the alternative, a decree on the original consideration.[4] So also in a suit based on tenancy, the plaintiff can claim damages for use and occupation in the alternative.[5] But in all such cases plaintiff has to set out the facts relied on by him in his alternative claim distinctly and separately.[6] He cannot be allowed to pick out such of the allegations as will support any alternative case put forward by him.[7] In a suit by a son to set aside a transfer by his mother, the plaintiff specifically alleged that his mother was of unsound mind, and stated further that she was under the control of the donee. The Privy Council was inclined to the view that the claim based on undue influence cannot be entertained as it was not specifically pleaded.[8] So also in a suit on a Hundi, the Privy Council declined to pass a decree on the original consideration as such an alternative relief had not been prayed for.[9]

But where in a suit, all the facts giving rise to the alternative claim are fully stated in the plaint, the fact that the plaintiff has not formally asked for the relief on the alternative claim, is no bar to the granting of the relief on that basis.[10]

O. 7, R. 7, Notes 3—4.

The plaintiff might rely upon different allegations in the alternative claim even though they may be inconsistent with each other.

See O. 6, R. 2, Note 5.

A prayer for alternative relief cannot be converted into one for additional relief.[11] A plaintiff praying for a relief and also for a lesser relief in the alternative, cannot be deemed to have waived his right to the relief originally claimed.[12] Where the plaintiff asks for one of two alternative reliefs and is granted one, he cannot, in appeal, contend that he should be given the other relief.[13]

4. Events happening after suit.—The ordinary rule is that the rights of parties must be determined as at the date of the action, and not on the basis of rights which accrued to them after the institution of the suit.[1] Thus, where the plaintiff has no cause of action at all to institute the suit, he will not ordinarily be allowed to take advantage of a cause of action arising subsequent to the suit and claim relief on that basis.[2] Nor where a plaintiff has a cause of action on the date of the suit, will relief be ordinarily refused to him on that basis by reason of subsequent events.[3]

But where it is shown that the original relief claimed has, by reason of subsequent change of circumstances, become inappropriate or that it is necessary to have the decision of the Court on the altered circumstances in order to shorten litigation or to do complete justice between the parties, the Courts may depart from the general rule and mould the relief on the basis of the altered circumstances.[4] Thus where, pending a suit for a declaration of title, the defendant takes possession of the property in dispute, the plaintiff may amend the plaint by adding a prayer for possession instead of bringing another suit.[5] Similarly if, pending a suit for partition by A against his brothers B and C, B dies, A can amend his plaint and claim a half share instead of one-third.[6] Again, where in a suit for money the real cause of action arose only after the institution of the suit it was held in the cases noted below, that the Court should not reject the plaint and drive the plaintiff to file a fresh suit but should pass a decree on the basis of such subsequent cause of action.[7] It is not only in the power but sometimes the duty of the Court to take notices of subsequent event where, if it is not so done, the Court might decide matters no longer in controversy or deliver judgment which could not be carried into effect or grant a relief which is inappropriate and ineffectual.[8]

O. 7, R. 7, Note 4.

But the discretionary power to depart from the general rule and to take notice of subsequent events will not be exercised where it would have the effect of taking away the jurisdiction of the Court[9] or there is great delay in making the application[10] or if a fresh enquiry into other facts becomes necessary.[11] It will not also be exercised where the subsequent cause of action is alleged to arise by virtue of something done in the suit itself.[12] Thus in a suit for possession against a tenant on the ground of forfeiture by denial of title, the plaintiff on failing to prove such denial before suit, cannot take advantage of a denial in the written statement of the defendant.[13] The Court also will not exercise such discretionary power if the subsequent cause of action is entirely different and distinct from the cause of action as originally alleged.[14]

Where subsequent to the date of judgment of the first Court events happen which entitled the plaintiff to a change in the relief, can the appellate Court take notice of such events and mould the relief accordingly? In Mt. Anand Moyee Chowdhoorayan v. Sheeb Chunder Roy[15] Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows:—

"The first and most important question is, whether the decision of the Principal Suther Ameen was, when pronounced, a correct decision of the issues then pending before him between the then parties to the suit. No subsequent event, or devolution of interest, can affect this question; because to give effect to these, should justice require it, would be the office not of an appeal, but of some supplemental proceeding."

It was, however, held in the undermentioned cases[16] that there were exceptions to that general rule and in that such exceptional cases the appellate Court may take notice of events happening after the date of the judgment of the first Court. The introduction of the new rule O. 41, R. 33 on the lines of the English Rules of the Supreme Court enabling the appellate Court not only to pass any order which ought to have been passed or made but to pass such further or other decree or order as the case may require makes it now perfectly clear that on appeal "such a judgment may be given as ought to be given if the case came at that time before the Court of first instance".[17]

Synopsis.

1. Relief founded on separate grounds.

1. Relief founded on separate grounds.—The object of this rule is to prevent the trial being embarrassed by the want of clearness in the allegations in the plaint. Plaintiff may, as has been seen in Rule 2, ante, in a proper case, rely upon one set of material facts for his relief and also on another and even inconsistent set of material facts for relief in the alternative; but where such alternative cases are alleged, the facts belonging to them respectively should not be mixed up but should be stated separately so as to show on what facts each alternative relief is claimed.[1]

See "alternative and inconsistent allegations", O. 6, R. 2, supra, and alternative relief O. 7, R. 7, supra.

R. 9. [S. 58.] (1) The plaintiff shall endorse on the plaint, or annex thereto, a list of the documents (if any) which he has produced along with it; and, if the plaint is admitted, shall present as many copies on plain paper of the plaint as there are defendants, unless the Court by reason of the length of the plaint or the number of the defendants, or for any other sufficient reason, permits him to present a like number of concise statements of the nature of the claim made, or of the relief claimed in the suit, in which case he shall present such statements.

Concise statements.

(2) Where the plaintiff sues, or the defendant or any of the defendants is sued, in a representative capacity, such statements shall show in what capacity the plaintiff or defendant sues or is sued.

(3) The plaintiff may, by leave of the Court, amend such statements so as to make them correspond with the plaint.

Local Amendments.

ALLAHABAD.

In R. 9 (a) for the semicolon after "it" in clause (1), substitute a full stop and delete the rest of this clause as well as clauses (2) and (3); and (b) Re-number clause (4) as clause (2), deleting the words "or statements" therein.

BENGAL.

Cancel clause (1) and substitute therefor the following:—

"(1) The plaintiff shall endorse on the plaint, or annex thereto, a list of the documents (if any) which he has produced along with it.

(1-A) The plaintiff shall present with his plaint:—

(i) as many copies on plain paper of the plaint as there are defendants, unless the Court by reason of the length of the plaint or the number of the defendants, or for any other sufficient reason, permits him to present a like number of concise statements of the nature of the claim made, or of the relief claimed in the suit, in which case he shall present such statements;

(ii) a petition for service of summons to appear and answer together with the fees and draft forms of summons."

MADRAS.

In R. 9 of O. 7, after the word "and" occurring in the fourth line delete the comma and the five words following, viz., "if the plaint is admitted" and insert the expression "along with the plaint" after the words "shall present".

NAGPUR.

Substituting the following for Rule 9:—

"9. (1) The plaintiff shall endorse on the plaint or annex thereto a list of the documents (if any) which he has produced along with it.

(2) The chief ministerial officer of the Court shall sign such lists and the copies of the plaint presented under Rule 1 of Order 4, if, on examination, he finds them to be correct."

OUDH.

In Rule 9 (1) for the words "and if the plaint is admitted, shall present", substitute the words "and shall, at the same time, present". Also delete the words "unless the Court . . . . present such statements", as well as sub-Rules (2) and (3), and re-number sub-Rule (4) as sub-Rule (2) deleting the words "or statements".

RANGOON.

In O. 7, R. 9 (1), add the words "on the day on which the plaint is admitted" after the word "present".

SINDH.

Substitute the following for sub-Rule (1) of Rule 9 in Order 7:—

"9. (1) The plaintiff shall endorse on the plaint, or annex thereto, a list of the documents (if any) which he has produced along with it, and shall present along with the plaint as many copies of it on plain paper as there are defendants; on application made, the Court, may by reason of the length of the plaint or the number of the defendants, or for any other sufficient reason accept instead a like number of concise statements of the nature of the claim made, or of the relief claimed in the suit, presented along with the plaint."

1. Procedure on admitting plaint.—This rule relates to the procedure adopted when a plaint is admitted. It provides for presentation into Court of concise statements instead of copies of plaints for service on the defendants in the cases mentioned in the rule. These statements should contain the nature of the claim or of the relief claimed, and the capacity in which the party sues or is sued (sub-S. 2). As to the representative capacity of plaintiff, see O. 7, R. 4, supra, and as to the representative capacity of defendants, see O. 7, R. 5, supra.

Return of plaint.

R. 10. [S. 57.] (1) The plaint shall at any stage of the suit[2] be returned to be presented to the Court in which the suit should have been instituted.[7]

O. 7, R. 10, Note 1.

Procedure on returning plaint.

(2) On returning a plaint the Judge shall endorse thereon the date of its presentation and return, the name of the party presenting it, and a brief statement of the reasons for returning it.

Want of jurisdiction. See Note 1.

1. Scope of the Rule.—It is enacted in S. 15 ante that every suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it. Where a suit is instituted in a wrong Court, i.e., in a Court which is either not competent to try it, or which, though competent, is not the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it, the plaint should be returned, under the provisions of this rule to be presented to the proper Court. The reason is this: where the Court has no jurisdiction over the suit, a judgment given by it will be a determination coram non judice and it would be a futile proceeding for the judge to go on with an investigation which would have no jural effect.[1] Where the Court has jurisdiction, but is not the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it, it would, if such suits are entertained and tried, be overcrowding Courts of higher grade with suits, which, it is the object of the legislature to prevent.[2]

Where the Court comes to the conclusion that the suit should have been instituted in another Court, the only thing that it can do is to return the plaint for presentation to that Court and not to dismiss the suit.[3] But it has been held that a British Indian Court has no jurisdiction to return a plaint for presentation to a Court outside British India.[4]

The provisions of this rule are wide enough to cover all cases where the Court is unable to entertain the suit for want of jurisdiction, whatever may be the nature of the objection to its jurisdiction.[5] The shape in which the suit is originally instituted is the test of jurisdiction. Therefore, where it is found in the course of the hearing, as the result of admissions made by the parties or of the evidence led by them that the relief which the plaintiff was really entitled to was not cognisable by that Court the rule does not apply.[6]

The appellate Court remanded the case for re-trial in respect of that claim. The Subordinate Judge who had pecuniary jurisdiction over Rs. 1,000 returned the plaint for presentation to the Munsif's Court. Held, that this rule applied only where the suit as originally framed was wrongly instituted and did not apply to any part of a dismissed claim abandoned in appeal and that, hence, the order returning the plaint was not justified. Nur Khan v. Shaik Rahim, (1920) 54 Ind. Cas. 655. O. 7, R. 10, Note 1.

A Court has no jurisdiction to act under this rule after it has passed a decree in that suit.[7] Nor can it do so unless it comes to a definite finding that the suit should have been instituted in another Court.[8] Thus, a Court has no power to return the plaint for presentation to the proper Court merely on the ground that it would be more advantageous to the defendant to have the suit tried in that Court.[9]

Where a Court returns a plaint for presentation to the proper Court on the ground that it was beyond its jurisdiction, the plaintiff is entitled to relinquish a portion of the claim, so as to bring the suit within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the former Court and to represent the plaint in the same Court.[10]

Suppose now that two reliefs are claimed in a plaint, one of which the Court is not competent to grant, can the Court return the plaint as regards the relief which it is not competent to grant? There is a conflict of opinion on this point. According to one view, it is competent for the Court to return the plaint in respect of the cause of action which is not within its jurisdiction, and proceed with the suit in respect of the cause of action within its jurisdiction on a certified copy of the plaint.[11] A contrary view has been taken in the undermentioned cases,[12] which hold that the Court should retain the plaint, striking out therefrom such portions as are not within its jurisdiction and in respect of which the plaintiff could file another suit.

It is open to a Court to ignore a relief as being based on no cause of action and then to return the plaint under this rule, if it finds that the rest of the claim is within the jurisdiction of an inferior Court.[13] The Court can also return a plaint, when it finds the plaint has been over valued.[13-a]

O. 7, R. 10, Notes 1—2.

A Court which has once returned the plaint for presentation to another Court, has no jurisdiction to re-entertain it although the latter Court has returned it for presentation to the former Court unless the order of the former Court is set aside by a superior Court.[14]

Where a Munsif's Court returns a plaint for presentation to proper Court, and in appeal against that order, the District Court holds that the Munsif's Court has jurisdiction to entertain the plaint, the Munsif's Court is bound by such order.[14-a] But where a Munsif returns a plaint for presentation to the Revenue Court and the Revenue Court returns it as being not cognizable by it, and the District Judge in an appeal from the order of the Revenue Court holds that it is a suit cognizable by the Civil Court, the Munsif is not bound by the order of the District Judge. He may make such order on the plaint as he thinks proper, when it is represented to him.[14-b] When one Court returns a plaint for presentation to another Court and the latter returns it for presentation to the former, the High Court can interfere and say in which Court the plaint is to be filed.[14-c]

Where a plaint is returned under this rule the vakalathnama should also be returned as it enures for the suit in the Court in which it is subsequently presented.[15]

This rule is made applicable to proceedings under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act.[16]

2. At any stage of the suit.—The direction in this rule is imperative[1] and as soon as the Court arrives at a conclusion at any stage of the suit that it should have been instituted in some other Court, the plaint should at once be returned.[2] The words "at any stage of the suit" have been newly added and give effect to the Full Bench decision in I.L.R. 8 Bom. 313.

A Court which has no jurisdiction over a suit cannot pass any judicial order in such a suit except the orders which the statute empowers it to pass[3] and all the proceedings in the suit before such return are of no effect.[4] Thus, where a Court finds that a suit is undervalued and on re-valuation the suit is found to be beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of that Court, the proper procedure to be followed by the Court is to return the plaint for presentation to the proper Court and not to call upon the plaintiff to pay the proper Court-fee according to the correct valuation and to reject the plaint under O. 7, R. 11 on non-payment of the additional Court-fee.[5] O. 7, R. 10, Notes 2—5.

3. Return of plaint by appellate Court.—S. 107 provides that an 'appellate Court shall have the same powers and shall perform as nearly as may be, the same duties as are conferred and imposed by the Code on Courts of original jurisdiction in respect of suits instituted therein'. Therefore, when an appellate Court decides that the suit should have been instituted in another Court, it has power to direct the plaint to be returned for presentation to the proper Court.[1]

4. Return of plaint by Small Cause Court.—This rule is applicable to Provincial Small Causes Courts as well and therefore, when such a Court finds that a suit is not cognizable by it, it should not go into the merits of the case, but should return the plaint under this rule.[1]

5. Return of plaint by Civil Court to Revenue Court and vice versa.—When a Civil Court finds that a suit is triable only by a Revenue Court, and not by itself, it should return the plaint to be presented to that Court.[1] Similarly the Revenue Court has the same power.[2]

O. 7, R. 10, Notes 5—9.

S. 99 of the Punjab Tenancy Act provides that where a Revenue Court or a Civil Court returns a plaint to be presented to the other Court and the latter Court is of opinion that the suit should have been instituted in the former Court, it should not again return the plaint, but refer the matter to the Chief Court.[3]

6. Return of applications.—This rule applies only to plaints and not to applications. Thus a Court cannot under this rule return an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis.[1] Nor can it return an application for the ascertainment of mesne profits on the ground that the amount exceeds the Court's pecuniary jurisdiction.[2]

7. Court in which the suit should have been instituted.—Where a suit is wrongly instituted in a case in which only an application should have been made to the executing Court, the plaint can be returned for presentation, as an application, to the executing Court.[1]

Where a plaint, returned under this rule, is presented to the proper Court without any undue delay but in the interval, immoveable property which is the subject-matter of the suit is alienated, is the alienation affected by the doctrine of lis pendens, enacted in S. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act? The High Court of Rangoon has held that the words 'at any stage of the suit' show that it cannot be said that there was no suit pending before the presentation to the proper Court, and that therefore, the doctrine of lis pendens will apply.[2]

8. Court-fee.—Where a plaint is returned for presentation to the proper Court, it does not lose its force by reason of the fact that the Court-fee stamp affixed thereto was cancelled by the Court in which the suit was instituted. The Court of representation is bound to give credit for the Court-fee already paid.[1] But if in the interval between the date of the original presentation and the presentation in the proper Court, the fee payable on the plaint is increased by the legislature, the amount of Court-fee payable is governed by the law in force on the date of the proper presentation.[2]

9. Limitation.—Where a suit has been instituted in a Court which is found to have no jurisdiction and it is found necessary to raise a second suit in a Court of proper jurisdiction, the second suit cannot be regarded as a continuation of the first, even though the subject-matter and the parties to the suit are identical.[1] Therefore, for purposes of limitation the date of the institution of the suit is the date on which the plaint is presented to the Court in which it ought to have been instituted.[2] But the plaintiff can, in such a case, avail himself of the provisions of S. 14 of the Limitation Act, and claim the exclusion of the time during which the prior proceeding was prosecuted in good faith.[3] The period that can be deducted under that section is the period from the date of the filing of the plaint to the date on which it was finally returned by the Court for representation.[4] There is a difference of opinion on the question whether the Court returning a plaint under this rule can allow the plaintiff a period within which he might represent it in the proper Court. In an earlier case of the Calcutta High Court[5] it was held that the Court had a discretion to grant a reasonable time within which the plaintiff might present the plaint to the proper Court. But the same High Court has in a later decision[6] held that the order granting time is a nullity and will not save the suit from the bar of limitation.

10. Chartered High Courts.—Order 49, Rule 3, sub-R. 1 provides that this rule is not applicable to Chartered High Courts. As to the practice of the High Court of Bombay on its Original Side, see the undermentioned cases.[1]

11. Appeal.—An order under this rule, returning a plaint to be presented to the proper Court is appealable under O. 43, R. 1 (a), whether the order is made by the Court of the first instance[1] or by the Court of first appeal in the exercise of its powers under S. 107 ante.[2] But where such an order is reversed or confirmed in appeal, a second appeal is barred by the provisions of

O. 7, R. 10, Note 11.

S. 104, sub-S. 2.[3] The appellate order reversing that of the Court of first instance cannot also be construed as an order of remand under O. 41, R. 23 so as to be appealable under O. 43, R. 1 (u) inasmuch as the order is not one passed on appeal from a decree. But the aggrieved party can under S. 105 dispute the correctness of the order in an appeal from the decree if he is otherwise entitled to do so.[4]

Where a Small Cause Court returns a plaint under S. 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, to be presented to an ordinary Civil Court in order to decide a question of title to immoveable property, the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to return again the plaint under this rule, as the reference to the Civil Court by the Small Cause Court was under a special provision of law empowering the Small Cause Court to make such reference.[5] S. 192 of the Madras Estates Land Act excludes the operation of O. 43 to proceedings under that Act and consequently where, in an appeal to the District Court from a decree in a suit under that Act, the District Court, holding that the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction, directed the plaint to be presented to the proper Court, it was held that no appeal lay against the order of the District Court to the High Court.[6]

It has been held by the High Court of Madras and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur that a plaintiff whose plaint is returned for presentation to the proper Court and who accordingly presents the plaint to the proper Court does not forfeit his right of appeal against the order of return simply, on the ground that he chose to file his plaint in the latter Court.[7] But the High Court of Calcutta and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh have taken a contrary view.[8] The High Court of Calcutta, has, however, in a later case held that the plaintiff will not forfeit his right of appeal if he specifically reserves his right to do so.[9]

An appellate Court which reverses an order returning a plaint under this rule, has no jurisdiction to remand the case to the lower Court for fresh disposal; the proper procedure is to annul the order of the trial Court and direct it to dispose of the suit according to Law.[10] O. 7, R. 10, Notes 11—12.

Where a memorandum of appeal is returned for presentation to the proper Court, is the order of return appealable? The High Courts of Calcutta, Allahabad and Lahore[11] have held that the word "plaint" in this rule does not include a memorandum of appeal and that, therefore, no appeal lies from such an order. The High Court of Madras, the Chief Court of Lower Burma and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh, have, on the other hand, held that an appeal does lie in such cases.[12]

12. Revision.—Where a Court erroneously returns a plaint for presentation to the proper Court, it fails to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it and a revision will lie if the other condition in S. 115 are satisfied.[1] See also Note 11 to S. 115 and the cases cited in foot-note 2 thereto. As to whether an order of the appellate Court confirming or reversing an order of the Court of first instance returning a plaint under this rule, is revisable see Note 15 to S. 115 and the undermentioned cases.[2]

1. Legislative changes.—

1. Clause (a) corresponds to clause (a) of S. 53 of the old Code which provided that "the plaint may, at the discretion of the Court, at, or any time before the settlement of issues be rejected . . . . ." See Note 10 and the undermentioned cases decided under the old Code.[1]
2. The words "Positive rule of" before "law" in clause (d) have been omitted.
3. Clause (d) of S. 54 of the old Code has been omitted, as this Code does not anywhere provide for the return of pleadings for amendment.

2. Scope of the rule.—This rule enacts that the plaint shall be rejected in the four classes of cases mentioned in clauses (a) to (d). But the instances given cannot be regarded as exhaustive of all the cases in which a Court can reject a plaint, or as limiting the inherent powers of the Court in respect thereof.[1] Thus a Court has jurisdiction, in a proper case, to reject the plaint filed by the next friend of a minor on the ground that it is not in the interests of the minor that the suit should be proceeded with[1-a] So also where it is alleged that a suit was instituted without the signature and authority of the plaintiff, the Court will frame a preliminary issue on the point and reject the plaint if it finds the issue against the plaintiff.[2] An appellate Court has the same powers of rejecting a plaint as the Court of first instance.[3] O. 7, R. 11; Notes 2—3.

Where a suit is disposed of under this rule, the Court ought not to dismiss the suit, but should reject the plaint.[4] The effect of rejection as distinguished from a dismissal is that, in the former case, the plaintiff would not under Rule 13, infra, be precluded from filing a fresh plaint in respect of the same cause of action, if he so desires.

A plaintiff is not entitled to have the dismissal of a suit for default, set aside under O. 9, R. 9 on the ground that the plaint should have been rejected.[5]

This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary, or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction (see O. 49, R. 3, infra). The High Court of Allahabad has, in the undermentioned case[6] held that this rule is inapplicable to their appellate jurisdiction also notwithstanding the provisions of S. 107 of the Code.

3. "Where it does not disclose a cause of action".—When a plaint is filed, it is the duty of the Court to see that the plaint contains the necessary allegations which must be proved before a decree could be given, and, if not, to reject the plaint.[1] To enable a Court to reject a plaint on this ground, it should look at the plaint and at nothing else.[2] In asking the Court to decide an issue like this (which is called a plea of demurrer), the defendants must be taken to admit for the sake of argument that the allegations of the plaintiff in his plaint are true modo et forma—in manner and form.[3] In doing so they must be taken to reserve their right to show that those allegations are wholly or partially false in the further stages of the action, should the preliminary point be overruled. The power to reject a plaint under this clause must be exercised only if the Court comes to the conclusion that even if all the allegations are proved, the plaintiff would not be entitled to any relief whatever.[4]

O. 7, R. 11, Notes 3—5.

As to cases where a cause of action accrues after the presentation of the plaint see O. 7, R. 7. See also the undermentioned cases[5] deciding whether a particular plaint did or did not disclose a cause of action.

The expression "cause of action" as used in this rule does not mean a claim which is still enforceable under the Law of Limitation. Where, therefore, a suit is barred by time it cannot be said that the plaint does not disclose a cause of action, and that it falls to be dealt with under cl. (a). The Court may, however, proceed under cl. (d).[6]

4. "Where the relief claimed is under-valued."—If the Court comes to the conclusion that the plaintiff's valuation of a suit is fictitious, it can compel him to make a correct valuation and can reject the plaint on his failure to do so; but it cannot itself fix a valuation in place of the plaintiff's valuation.[1] If the correct valuation would make the Court incompetent to try the suit, then the matter falls under R. 10, ante, and not under the clause, (see O. 7, R. 10, Note 2).

In order to determine whether a suit is properly valued or not the Court must confine its attention to the plaint and should not look to other circumstances which may subsequently influence the judgment of the Court as to the true value of the relief sought.[2]

See also Note 5, infra, and S. 6, Note 4.

5. Where the plaint is insufficiently stamped.—Where the plaint is properly valued (either at the time of the presentation itself or at a time subsequent thereto, in pursuance of an order of the Court under cl. (b), but is insufficiently stamped, the Court can act under this rule.[1] But the Court cannot exercise the powers conferred under this clause after the suit has been decided finally so far as that Court is concerned.[2] O. 7, R. 11, Note 5.

Under the old Code there was a conflict of opinion as to whether a suit would become barred by limitation where the deficiency in Court-fee is supplied after the period of limitation for the suit but within the time fixed by the Court. The conflict has now been set at rest by the enactment of S. 149. For a full discussion of the subject, see Note 7 to S. 149 and the following cases.[3]

A plaint cannot be rejected under this rule for under-valuation or for insufficiency of stamp unless the plaintiff is given an opportunity to correct the valuation or to supply the deficient stamp as the case may be, within a time to be fixed by the Court, and he fails to do so.[4] Nor does the use of the words "shall be rejected" prevent the Court from exercising its powers under S. 148 of the Code and enlarge the time fixed by it, from time to time.[5] No express order is necessary for such extension of time. An extension may be inferred from the fact that the Court has actually allowed a thing to be done beyond the prescribed time.[6]

Where a plaint is written upon insufficiently stamped paper and the plaintiff does not supply the requisite stamp within the time fixed by the Court, can he be allowed to reduce his claim so as to bring it within certain Court-fees? There is a conflict of opinion on this point. The High Courts of

O. 7, R. 11, Notes 5—6.

Allahabad and Madras have held that it is open to the plaintiff to relinquish a portion of the claim in order to bring it within a certain Court-fees.[7] The High Courts of Calcutta and Bombay have, on the other hand, held that under such circumstances the Court has no jurisdiction to do so and is bound to reject the plaint, on the ground that this rule is mandatory.[8]

Where a plaintiff is given time to pay additional Court-fee under this rule and he does not appear on the date fixed in consequence of which the Court dismisses the suit, the order though one of dismissal must be deemed to be an order under this rule, and not under O. 9, R. 8, so that a fresh suit on the same cause of action will not be barred under O. 9, R. 9.[9] Cl. (c) of this rule does not apply to the case of failure of a plaintiff to pay stamp duty on a partition decree.[10]

6. Memorandum of appeal insufficiently stamped.—This Rule applies in terms to plaints insufficiently stamped. Where a memorandum of appeal is found to be presented with an insufficient Court-fee, is the Court bound to grant time to the appellant to make up the deficiency? There is a conflict of opinion on this point. According to the High Courts of Bombay[1] and Calcutta[2] and the Chief Court of Oudh[3] this rule applies to memorandum of appeals also by virtue of S. 107. A contrary view has been taken by the High Courts of Allahabad,[4] Lahore,[5] and Patna[6] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur.[7] This view proceeds on the ground that the insertion of S. 582 in the old Code corresponding to S. 149, providing for memorandum of appeals, shows that the rule does not apply to memorandum of appeals. The High Court of Madras expressed this view in an earlier case,[8] but has, in a later case[9] dissented from this view and adopted the former view. See also Note 9 to S. 149.

Where an appeal is filed in time and the deficient Court-fee is paid within the time fixed by the Court, though on that date the appeal would have been barred by limitation, the appeal must be deemed to have been filed on the date when it was presented.[10] O. 7, R. 11, Notes 6—8.

7. Where the suit appears to be barred by any Law—Cl. (d).—This clause authorises the rejection of a plaint where the suit appears, from the statement in the plaint, to be barred by any law.[1] Where a plaint appears to be barred by limitation and no ground of exemption from limitation is mentioned therein, the Court may in proper cases allow an amendment of the plaint under O. 6, R. 17, so as to make a plea of exemption, if any.[2]

8. Rejection of plaint on other grounds.—As has been seen in Note 2 ante the instances given in this rule are not exhaustive of the case in which a Court may reject a plaint. But a Court has no power to reject a plaint merely because it is defective in that it does not comply with some provisions of law.[1] The proper procedure in such a case, is to call on the plaintiff to cure the defect and on his failure to do so, to proceed to decide the suit forthwith and to dismiss it under O. 17, R. 3 or to reject the plaint under its inherent powers.[2] S. 203, sub-S. 4 of the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908) provides that the following clause shall be deemed to be added to this rule as Cl. (e), viz.:—

"(e) In any suit to which S. 203 of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, applies, if the certified copy therein mentioned is not annexed to the plaint and the plaintiff on being required by the Court to produce it fails to do so within this time allowed by the Court."

O. 7, R. 11, Notes 9—11.

9. Rejection of plaint in part.—A plaint, cannot, under this rule, be rejected in part and retained in part. It should be rejected as a whole.[1] Thus, where, in a suit by two plaintiffs against the Secretary of State for India, one of them has failed to give notice as required by S. 80 of the Code, the plaint should be rejected as a whole and not merely as regards the plaintiff who had failed to give notice.[2]

10. At what stage plaint can be rejected.—The provisions of this rule are imperative and can be brought into operation at any stage of the suit. Therefore, the registration of a plaint does not prevent its rejection under this rule.[1] Where, however, a plaint is rejected in the early stages of the suit there is no justification for allowing excessive costs to the defendant.[2]

11. Appeal.—An order rejecting a plaint whether under this rule or not is a decree as defined in S. 2, sub-S. 2 ante and hence is appealable as such.[1] But in cases coming under Clause (b) of this rule, if the order is based merely upon a valuation of the subject-matter of the suit and the only question involved is as to the amount upon which the Court-fee has to be paid, the decision of the first Court is final under S. 12 of the Court Fees Act. Where, however, the question is, what provision of the Court Fees Act, applies to the relief sought for in the plaint or under what category the suit falls, the decision is not final under that section and an appeal is not barred.[2]

O. 7, R. 11, Notes 11—12.

The High Court of Calcutta has held in the undermentioned cases[8] that though this rule applies to a memorandum of appeal by virtue of S. 107, still, an order rejecting a memorandum of appeal for deficiency of Court-fee is not a decree or a final order.

See Note 19 to S. 96 ante.

Where a plaint returned under R. 10 ante for presentation to the proper Court, is rejected by the latter Court, and the order of return is reversed on appeal, the plaintiff having suppressed the fact of rejection, the appellate order is void and the only remedy of the plaintiff is to appeal against the order of rejection.[4]

12. Revision.—An order rejecting a plaint being a decree and appealable as such; a revision against such an order is incompetent.[1] But where appeal is barred under S. 12 of the Court Fees Act,[2] or where an appeal against an order under this rule is rejected as incompetent[3] or where the plaint is rejected by a Provincial Small Cause Court,[4] the order is revisible if the conditions of S. 115 are satisfied. There is a conflict of opinion on the question whether an order demanding additional Court-fee is open to revision, so long as the order has not resulted in the rejection of the plaint by non-compliance with the order. It has been held in the undermentioned cases[5] that no revision lies, since the plaintiff has another remedy open to him by way of appeal on the rejection of the plaint. The contrary opinion has been maintained in the undermentioned cases[6] on the ground that the question is really one of jurisdiction as the plaint has to be rejected if the stamp duty has not been paid. According to the High Court of Calcutta, where the plaintiff's valuation is accepted by the Court as correct on an examination for the facts alleged, the order is not open to revision inasmuch as such an order does not fall within S. 115 document is an entry in a shop book or account, in which case, he should produce a true copy of the entry to be filed with the plaint and the procedure laid down in Rule 17, infra, should be followed. Where the plaintiff relies on any document as evidence in support of his claim, he should enter such document in a list to be annexed to the plaint, whether the document is in his power or not.[3] But even such documents should if they are in his possession or power, be produced into Court at or before the first hearing of the suit.[4] (See O. 13, R. 1, infra.) A document on which the plaintiff has not in terms sued, and which is not produced into Court when the plaint is presented, can only be treated, if subsequently produced, as a piece of evidence and not as creating any rights in favour of the plaintiff.[5]

The object of this rule is to exclude documents as to the existence of which, at the date of the suit, there may be reasonable doubt and as to the genuineness of which suspicions might arise when subsequently tendered.[6] The provisions of this rule therefore are imperative[7] and compel the plaintiff to produce or disclose all documents on which he relies in support of his claim.[8] But the plaintiff's failure to produce or disclose the documents as provided by this rule, does not entail the return,[9] or rejection of the plaint or the dismissal of the suit.[9-a] The only penalty for such default is that he cannot produce the documents in evidence at the hearing without the leave of the Court (see Rule 18, infra).

This rule, however, does not apply if the plaintiff himself is not aware of the existence of any documents which he subsequently discovers as supporting his claim.[10]

It has been held by the Privy Council that if the plaintiff produces the document sued on, as required by this rule, and the document is lost subsequently from the custody of the Court, the plaintiff should be allowed to adduce secondary evidence of the document under S. 65 of the Evidence Act, 1872, without showing how the original document was lost.[11]

Bankers' Book Evidence Act. See Note 1.

1. Shop-book or Account.—Section 4 of the Bankers' Book of Evidence Act,[1] provides that a certified copy of any entry in a banker's book shall in all legal proceedings be received as prima facie evidence of the existence of such entry and shall be admitted as evidence of the matters, transactions, and accounts therein recorded in every case where, and to the same extent as the original entry is now by law admissible, but not further or otherwise. The term 'Bankers Books' includes ledgers, daybooks, cash books, account books and all other books used in the ordinary course of business of a bank.[2] Therefore if the document sued on is a banker's book it is not necessary to produce the original book itself along with the plaint: it is enough if a certified copy of the entry or entries is produced. But it should be shown that the bank is one to whose books the provisions of the Bankers' Book Evidence Act have been extended.[3]

If the document sued on is not a banker's book but is an entry in a shop book or account the plaintiff should produce the book or account at the time of filing the plaint together with a true copy of the entry sued on.[4] Thereupon the Court or its officers should mark the document for identification[4-a] and should, if the copy is found to be correct, file the copy along with the plaint.

But the fact that the original document is not presented along with the plaint, as provided by this rule and the plaint is registered is not a ground for rejecting the plaint: but the plaintiff cannot afterwards produce the document in evidence except with the leave of the Court as provided by rule 18 infra.[5] O. 7, R. 17, Note 1.

1. Scope and object of the Rule.—The Policy underlying this rule is to exclude evidence, the existence of which at the date of the suit is doubtful, and as to the genuineness of which suspicion may arise because it was produced at a late stage of the suit.[1] The Court has, however, a wide discretion with regard to the reception of documents which were not produced with the plaint or entered in the list of documents[2] and where there can be no doubt about the genuineness of the documents produced, such as certified copies of public documents or records of judicial proceedings, Courts will not as a rule shut them out.[3] But even in such cases leave may be refused where there has been unreasonable delay in the production of documents, unless satisfactory reasons are assigned for the delay.[4] An appellate Court will not ordinarily interfere with the discretion exercised by the lower Court under this rule.[5]

O. 7, R. 18, Notes 1—3.

The leave granted by the Court need not be express, but may be gathered from the records and the circumstances of the case.[6]

2. Cases where leave is not necessary.—Sub-rule 2 of this Rule enacts that the rule as to the inadmissibility of documents not produced with, or referred to in the plaint does not apply to the following cases:—

(1) Where the document is to be handed over to the witness for the purpose of refreshing his memory and not one to be relied upon as a probative document in itself in support of the plaintiff's case.[1]

(2) Where the documents are produced in answer to any case set up by the defendant.[2]

(3) Where they are produced for the cross-examination of the defendant's witnesses. The words "defendant's witnesses" include also plaintiff's witnesses who have turned hostile to the plaintiff and whom the plaintiff is permitted to cross-examine.[3]

3. Revision.—The question of admission of evidence is not ordinarily a question of jurisdiction but is merely one of law and no revision will lie in such cases.[4]

ALLAHABAD.

O. 7. Allahabad Rules 19—22.

Add the following rules to Order 7:—

19. Every plaint or original petition shall be accompanied by a proceeding giving an address written in English in block letters at which service of notice, summons or other process may be made on the plaintiff or petitioner. Plaintiffs or petitioners subsequently added shall, immediately on being so added, file a proceeding of this nature.

20. An address for service filed under the preceding rule shall be within the local limits of the District Court within which the suit or petition is filed, or of the District Court within which the party ordinarily resides, if within the limits of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh.

21. Where a plaintiff or petitioner fails to file an address for service, he shall be liable to have his suit dismissed or his petition rejected by the Court suo motu or any party may apply for an order to that effect, and the Court may make such order as it thinks just.

22. Where a party is not found at the address given by him for service and no agent or adult male member of his family on whom a notice or process can be served, is present, a copy of the notice or process shall be affixed to the outer door of the house. O. 7, Nag. Rules 19—21.

NAGPUR.

Add the following as Rules 19 to 23:—

"19. Every plain or original petition shall be accompanied by an address at which service of process may be made on the plaintiff or the petitioner. The address shall be within the local limits of the civil district in which the suit or petition is filed, or of the civil district in which the party ordinarily resides, if within the limits of the Central Provinces and Berar. This address shall be called the "registered address" and it shall hold good throughout interlocutory proceedings and appeals and also for a further period of two years from the date of final decision and for all purposes including those of execution.

Registered address.

Registered address by a party subsequently added as plaintiff or petitioner.

20. Any party subsequently added as plaintiff or petitioner shall in like manner file a registered address at the time of applying or consenting to be joined as plaintiff or petitioner.

Consequence of non-filing of registered address.

21. (1) If the plaintiff or the petitioner fails to file a registered address as required by Rule 19 or 20, he shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to have his suit dismissed or his petition rejected.

An order under this rule may be passed by the Court suo motu or on the application of any party.

(2) Where a suit is dismissed or a petition rejected under sub-Rule (1), the plaintiff or the petitioner may apply for an order to set the dismissal or the rejection aside and if he files a registered address and satisfies the Court that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from filing the registered address at the proper time, the Court shall set aside the dismissal or the rejection upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit or petition. O. 7, Lah. Rules 21—23.

22. Where the plaintiff or the petitioner is not found at his registered address and no agent or adult male member of his family on whom a process can be served is present, a copy of the process shall be affixed to the outer door of the house and such service shall be deemed to be as effectual as if the process had been personally served.

Affixing of process and its validity.

23. A plaintiff or petitioner who wishes to change his registered address shall file a verified petition and the Court shall direct the amendment of the record accordingly. Notice of such petition shall be given to such other parties to the suit or proceedings as the Court may deem it necessary to inform."

Change of registered address.

OUDH.

19. Every plaint or original petition shall be accompanied by an address at which service of notice, summons or other process may be made on the plaintiff or petitioner. This address shall be called the "registered address", and service thereat shall be deemed to be sufficient service. O. 7, Oudh Rules 19—26.

20. Any party subsequently added as plaintiff or petitioner shall, in like manner, file a registered address at the time of applying or consenting to be joined as plaintiff or petitioner.

21. A registered address shall be within the local limits of the District Court within which the suit or petition is filed, if the plaintiff or petitioner resides or carries on business within those limits.

22. If a plaintiff or petitioner fails to file a registered address as required above, he shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to have his suit dismissed or his petition rejected.

An order under this rule may be passed by the Court suo motu or on the application of any party.

23. Where the registered address of the plaintiff or petitioner is within the limits of a head-quarters, town or of a municipality of India (including Burma) or Ceylon, a notice, summons or other process may be served on him at that address by registered post and such service shall be deemed to be as effectual as if the notice or process had been personally served.

24. In all cases to which Rule 23 does not apply where a plaintiff or petitioner is not found at his registered address and no agent or adult male member of his family on whom a notice or process can be served is present, a copy of the notice or process shall be affixed to the outer door of the house. If, on the date fixed, such plaintiff or petitioner is not present another date shall be fixed and a copy of the notice, summons or other process shall be sent to his registered address by registered post, and such service shall be deemed to be as effectual as if the notice or process had been personally served.

25. Whenever a plaintiff or petitioner has engaged a pleader to act for him a notice or process for service on him shall be served in the manner prescribed by O. 3, R. 5, unless the Court directs service at his registered address:

Provided that, where a notice is served on a pleader under the above rule, he shall be given sufficient time to communicate with his client and to receive instructions.

Explanation.—Where ten days' time has been allowed under this rule, this shall be deemed sufficient time within the meaning of this proviso in the absence of an application made within such ten days by the pleader concerned for further time.

26. A plaintiff or petitioner who wishes to change his registered address shall file a verified petition, and the Court shall direct the amendment of the record accordingly. Notice of such petition shall be given to such other parties to the suit or proceedings as the Court may deem it necessary to inform, and may be either served upon the pleader for such parties or be sent to them by registered post, as the Court thinks fit.

O. 7, Oudh Rule 27.

27. Nothing in Rr. 19 to 26 shall prevent the Court from directing the service of a notice or process in any other manner, if for any reason, it thinks fit.

O. 7, Pat. Rules 19—22.

PATNA.

Add the following Rules 19 to 22:—

"19. Every plaint or original petition shall be accompanied by a statement giving an address at which service of notice, summons or other process may be made on the plaintiffs or petitioner, and every plaintiff or petitioner subsequently added shall, immediately on being so added, file a similar statement.

20. An address for service filed under the preceding rule shall state the following particulars:—

(1) the name of the street and number of the house (if in a town);

(2) the name of the town or village;

(3) the Post office;

(4) the district; and

(5) the munsifi (if in Bihar and Orissa) or the District Court (if outside Bihar and Orissa).

21. Where a plaintiff or petitioner fails to file an address for service, he shall be liable to have his suit dismissed or his petition rejected by the Court suo motu, or any party may apply for an order to that effect, and the Court may make such order as it thinks just.

O. 7, Sind Rules, 19—23.

SIND.

Add the following as Rules 19 to 26 in Order 7:—

19. Address to be filed with plaint or original petition.—Every plaint or original petition shall be accompanied by a memorandum in writing giving an address at which service of notice, or summons or other process may be made on the plaintiff or petitioner. Plaintiffs or petitioners subsequently added, shall immediately on being so added, file a memorandum in writing of this nature.

20. Nature of address to be filed.—An address for service filed under the preceding rule shall be within the local limits of the district Court within which the suit or petition is filed, or if he cannot conveniently give an address as aforesaid, at a place where a party ordinarily resides.

21. Consequence of failing to file address.—Where a plaintiff or petitioner fails to file an address for service, he shall be liable to have his suit dismissed or his petition rejected by the Court suo motu or any party may apply for an order to that effect, and the Court may make such order as it thinks just.

22. Procedure when party not found at the place of address.—Where a party is not found at the address given by him for service and no agent or adult male member of his family on whom a notice or process can be served is present a copy of the notice or process shall be affixed to the outer door of the house. If on the date fixed such party is not present, another date shall be fixed and a copy of the notice, summons or other process shall be sent to the registered address by registered post pre-paid for acknowledgment, and such service shall be deemed to be as effectual as if the notice or process had been personally served.

23. Service of notice on pleaders.—Where a party engages a pleader, notice or process on him shall be served in the manner prescribed by Order 3, Rule 5, unless the Court directs service at the address for service given by the party.

24. Change of address.—A party who desires to change the address for service given by him as aforesaid shall file a fresh memorandum in writing to this effect and the Court may direct the amendment of the record accordingly. Notice of such memorandum shall be given to such other parties to the suit as the Court may deem it necessary to inform, and may be served either upon the pleaders for such parties or be sent to them by registered post, as the Court thinks fit. O. 7, Sind Rules 24—26.

25. Rules not binding on Court.—Nothing in these rules shall prevent the Court from directing the service of a notice or process in any other manner, if, for any reasons, it thinks fit to do so.

26. Applicability to notice under Order 21, Rule 22.—Nothing in these rules shall apply to the notice prescribed by Order 21, Rule 22.

N.-W. F. P.

Add the following rules:—

19. Every plaint or original petition shall be accompanied by a proceeding giving an address at which service of notice, summons, or other process may be made on the plaintiff or petitioner. Plaintiffs or petitioners subsequently added shall immediately, on being so added, file a proceeding of this nature.

20. An address for service filed under the preceding rule shall be within the local limits of the district Court within which the suit or petition is filed or, of the district Court within which the party ordinarily resides, if within the limits of the North-West Frontier Province.

21. Where a plaintiff or petitioner fails to file an address for service shall be liable to have his suit dismissed or his petition rejected by the Court suo motu or any party may apply for an order to that effect, and the Court may make such order as it thinks just.

22. A party who desires to change the address for service given by him as aforesaid shall file a verified petition, and the Court may direct the amendment of the record accordingly. Notice of such petition shall be given to such other parties to the suit as the Court may deem it necessary to inform, and may be either served upon the pleaders for such parties, or be sent to them by registered post as the Court thinks fit."

Order 7, Rule 22 (Allahabad).

Where service has been effected by affixture of the notice on the outer door of the house, but the party is not present on the date fixed for his appearance, the Court ought under this rule to order notice by registered post. Otherwise the service cannot be considered to be sufficient.[1]

This rule applies also to appellate proceedings by virtue of O. 41, R. 38 (3) All.[2]

LAHORE.

The following was added:—

"and with such written statement shall produce in Court all documents in his possession or power on which he bases his defence or any claim for set off.

(2) Where he relies on any other documents (whether in his possession or power or not) as evidence in support of his defence or claim for set-off he shall enter such documents in a list to be added or annexed to the written statement."

OUDH.

Order 8, Rule 1, add the following as Rule 1 (2), and read the existing Rule 1 as Rule 1 (1):—

1 (2).—The defendant shall file with his written statement a list of all the documents on which he relies as evidence in support of his case, shall produce with the written statement such of the documents as are in his possession or power, and shall cause the others to be summoned on a date to be fixed by the Court for the purpose.

Explanation.—A certified copy of a public document is a document "in the power" of a party, but where a document is in the possession of a person other than the defendant, it will not be deemed to be "in the power" of the defendant.

N.-W. F. P.

Add a sub-clause (2) "The defendant at the time of presenting a written statement shall, where he relies on any documents (whether in his possession or power or not), enter such documents in a list and produce those documents which are in his possession or power."

1. Written statement.—A written statement is the pleading of the defendant, and must be filed by him personally, or on his behalf by a duly constituted agent. The filing of a written statement by a third person on behalf of the defendant is not sanctioned by the Code.[1]

Where, after the service of summons the defendant has not had sufficient time to enable him to file a written statement[2] or where the Court requires him to file a written statement[3] it should grant an adjournment for that purpose. An appellate Court cannot call for a written statement from the defendant.[4] As to what a written statement should or should not contain, see O. 6, Rr. 2 and 7.

2. Supplemental written statement.—See Order 6, Rule 7 and Order 8, Rule 9.

3. First hearing—Meaning of.—The "first hearing" of a suit does not mean the day on which the witnesses are examined or the trial taken up. It means the day on which the Court goes into the pleadings in order to understand the contentions of the parties. In suits in which issues have to be framed, the day on which such issues are framed is the first hearing of the suit[1] in as much as on that day the Court looks into the pleadings with a view to understand the contentions of the parties. This is made clear by the provisions of Order 10, Rule 1 under which "the Court shall, at the first hearing of the suit, ascertain from each party or his pleader whether he admits or denies, such allegations or facts as are made in the plaint or written statement if any of the opposite party."

In cases in which no issues need be framed, such as small cause suits, the first hearing will, it is conceived, be the day on which the Court goes into the case of the parties for the purpose of trial.

4. Court-fee not leviable on written statement.—Written statements called for by the Court after the first hearing are specially exempted from a fee by S. 19, clause 3 of the Court Fees Act (of 1870). But it cannot be inferred therefrom that written statements filed at or before the first hearing are chargeable with a fee, since the legislature has expressly repealed the provision in the Code of 1859 requiring Court-fee on all written statements.[1]

R. 2. [New.] The defendant must raise by his pleading all matters which show the suit not to be maintainable, or that the transaction is either void or voidable in point of law, and all such grounds of defence as, if not raised, would be likely to take the opposite party by surprise, or would raise issues of fact not arising out of the plaint, as, for instance, fraud, limitation, release, payment, performance, or facts showing illegality.

New facts must be specially pleaded.

O. 8, R. 2, Notes 1—2.

1. Scope of the rule.—It is the duty of a defendant to particularise in his defence all points, either of fact or of law, which he desires to take.[1] If he does not do so, he will not be allowed to raise a new plea depending upon evidence for its determination, for the first time in appeal.[2] It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that a plea of estoppel is not one 'which shows the suit to be not maintainable' and, that therefore, can be allowed to be raised for the first time in appeal under O. 41, R. 2, though not raised in the written statement.[3] Whether a matter has been pleaded sufficiently to give the Court the right to form a judgment, depends upon the allegations and form of the pleadings; the Courts must not look to the mere wordings of the plaint, but to the issues settled and the manner of the treatment in the lower Court.[4] "The effect of the rule is, for reasons of practice and justice and convenience to require the party to tell his opponent what he is coming to the Court to prove. If he does not do that, the Court will deal with it in one of two ways. It may say that it is not open to him, that he has not raised it and will not be allowed to rely on it; or it may give him leave to amend by raising it and protect the other party, if necessary, by letting the case stand over. The rule is not one that excludes from the consideration of the Court the relevant subject-matter for decision simply on the ground that it is not pleaded. It leaves the party in mercy and the Court will deal with him as is just".[5] Thus a plea though not taken in the statement can be raised provided it is taken before the trial has commenced and no prejudice is caused to the plaintiff.[6]

2. Special defences.—In answer to the claim of a plaintiff, (for instance, on the basis of a contract), the defendant may admit that he made the contract, but may avoid the effect of that admission by pleading performance, fraud, release, limitation, etc.[1] Such a plea is called a plea in confession and avoidance. For instances of the nature of the pleas that may be set up in defence see the undermentioned cases.[2]

3. Alternative defences.—See Order 6, Rule 2 Notes.

4. Fraud.—See O. 6, R. 4.

5. Limitation.—A party should not be allowed to raise a plea of limitation for the first time in appeal where such plea involves a decision upon questions of fact.[1] Where the written statement asserts that the suit is barred by limitation, it is not necessary that the plea ought to be stated more explicitly, as by reference to the particular article of the Limitation Act.[2] But where the plaint itself shows that the suit is filed after the period prescribed, the Court is not precluded from going into the question of limitation even though it is not raised in the statement, provided it does not necessitate any investigation into any fresh facts.[3] As a matter of fact under section 3 of the Limitation Act the Court must dismiss the suit if on the facts stated in the plaint, the claim is barred.

6. Facts showing illegality.—A plea of illegality of the consideration for a bond which is the subject of suit must be definitely pleaded in the written statement for it is a case in which particulars may be necessary. The plea cannot be raised for the first time in the arguments.[1] See also Notes to Order 6, Rule 8.

7. Joint contractors—Separate defences.—In a suit against joint contractors, a successful defence pleaded by one only, enures for the benefit of the others as well.[1]

tion he must do so clearly and explicitly.[1] Thus, in Grocott v. Lovatt[2] the plaintiff alleged in para. 3 of his statement of claim that the defendants, on or about a certain date, falsely and maliciously wrote, printed and published a certain hand bill. The reply of the defendant to this was: "the defendant denies the facts alleged in para. 3 of the statement of claim." The Court of appeal held that the denial was sufficient. But a statement that the defendant "puts the plaintiff to proof of the several allegations in the plaint" or that he "does not admit the correctness of the statements contained in the plaint" is not a sufficient denial within the meaning of this rule (see Rule 5 below). The rule is not limited to denial alone; it includes non-admission as well, so that where a defendant pleads that he does not admit a particular allegation in the plaint, it would be a sufficient traverse.[3] As to the effect of failure to deny specifically, see O. 8, R. 5.

As a general rule the defendant should admit whatever facts can be proved against him without trouble; otherwise it would suggest that there is no substantial defence.[4] No party should traverse matter not alleged; he should be content to answer the case that is actually laid against him and should not plead that which he thinks his opponent meant or ought to have raised.[5]

2. Except damages.—The exception in this rule makes it unnecessary for the defendant to deny the claim to or amount of damages.[1] It is probably intended that damages shall be deemed to be put in issue in all cases, unless expressly admitted.

O. 8, R. 4.

And if an allegation is made with diverse circumstances, it shall not be sufficient to deny it along with those circumstances.*

O. 8, R. 4, Note 1.

1. Plaint allegations not to be denied evasively.—A sues B for dissolution of partnership alleging that he agreed to enter into partnership with him to carry on certain business. B in his written statement admits that he agreed to enter into partnership as alleged but adds that "the terms of the arrangement between himself and the plaintiff were not definitely agreed upon as alleged." This is an evasive denial of the fact of partnership and is not permissible.[1] Similarly, where several circumstances are set out in the plaint as constituting the details of certain transactions, and, the defendant, instead of denying the several circumstances specifically, denies them as a whole using almost the precise language of the allegations denied, the denial will, as a rule, be considered evasive.[2] Thus, if the plaintiff in an action for wages alleges that he has served the defendant as a hired servant from the 25th March, 1908 to 24th June, 1909, at Epson, in the County of Surrey, it would be a bad traverse for the defendant to plead "the plaintiff did not serve the defendant as a hired servant from the 25th March, 1908 to 24th June, 1909 at Epson in the County of Surrey." He must deny that the plaintiff ever served him at all, or else state how long he admits the plaintiff did serve him. He must not traverse the place which are immaterial, or, if he does, he must add the words 'or at any other place' after the words 'the plaintiff did not serve him at Epson'.[3] But where the plaintiff, claiming title under one S alleged that she died on the 28th of September, 1906, and the defendant pleaded that he did not admit that S died on the 28th of September, 1906, and that the suit was barred by limitation, the denial is not evasive, in as much as there is only one fact and that has been stated to be not admitted.[4] Where a denial is evasive leave to amend may be given under O. 6, R. 17, except where the defendant is found to have acted mala fide.[5]

O. 8, R. 5.

Not admitted. See Note 1.

Onus of proof—Where plaint allegations not denied. See Note 2, Pt. (1).

1. Scope of the rule.—"The whole object of pleadings is to bring the parties to an issue, and the object of this order is to prevent the issue being enlarged, which would prevent either party from knowing, when the cause came on for trial, what the real point to be decided was."[1] This rule states the effect of the failure to conform to rule 3 ante and must not be read in a sense inconsistent with rule 3; therefore, a general denial cannot mean a denial by implication.[2] The word 'specifically' qualifies also the words 'or stated to be not admitted' and therefore, a refusal to admit must also be stated specifically.[3] The words "if not denied specifically . . . or stated to be not admitted" must be read to mean "if not denied specifically . . . or if not stated to be not admitted". In other words every allegation of fact in the plaint will be deemed to be admitted, if in the written statement, it is specifically neither denied nor stated to be not admitted.[4]

2. Facts not denied specifically will be taken as admitted.—The effect of this rule is to relieve the plaintiff from the obligation of proving such allegations in his plaint as are neither specifically denied nor stated to be not admitted in the written statement.[1] Thus, where in a suit for ejectment the land from which it is sought to eject a tenant is alleged to be "old waste" under the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, and this is not traversed in the written statement, the defendant cannot afterwards plead that the land is not "old waste".[2] A plea that the defendant does not admit any of the allegations in the plaint except such as have been expressly admitted and that he puts the plaintiff to the proof of all allegations not so admitted is not a sufficient denial within the meaning of this rule: every allegation so denied will be deemed to have been admitted.[3] Similarly a plea that the defendant does not admit the correctness of certain allegations in the statement of claim and requires proof thereof, is not a sufficient denial.[4] Where a plaintiff suing as a curator of the estate of a deceased person, stated in the plaint that he was authorised by the Court to sue, and the defendant stated in reply that those allegations were not known to him, it was held that it was not open to him to raise again the question of the plaintiff's authority to sue.[5] But where a landlord sues a tenant for recovery of possession on the ground that the defendant had forfeited his lease by denial of his title and this plea is not traversed by the defendant such non-denial, though amounting to an admission of the denial of title will not by itself work a forfeiture of which the plaintiff can take advantage in that suit in as much as the forfeiture must have accrued before the suit was instituted.[6] O. 8, R. 5, Notes 2—5.

As to the effect of admissions made in the written statement, see the undermentioned cases[7] and also Evidence Act, Ss. 17 to 31 and S. 58.

3. "Except as against a person under disability."—The rule of admission by non-denial does not apply where the defendant is a person under disability such as a minor.[1] But this exception has nothing to do with the conduct of the suit. Thus, if at the time of the framing of issues or at the trial, the person representing a minor defendant admits certain allegations of fact, it cannot be said that this rule in any way affects such admissions.[2]

4. Admission, if binds co-defendants.—As to whether and when an admission made by a defendant in his written statement will bind co-defendants, see Ss. 17—23 of the Evidence Act and the undermentioned cases.[1]

5. Court may require the facts so admitted to be proved.—In England the rule as to admission by non-denial is very stringent and a defendant who omits to traverse, in his defence, any allegation of fact in the statement of claim is not allowed to traverse that fact at the trial. In India, the general practice is not to construe the pleadings very strictly and on this principle, the defendant who had omitted to traverse in his written statement, allegations made in the plaint, was allowed, in cases arising under the old Code, to traverse them at the hearing under special circumstances.[1] The proviso to this rule now makes it clear that the failure of the defendant to deny the allegations in the plaint does not necessarily amount to proof and that the Court could, in its discretion, require proof of such allegations.[2] The discretion should be exercised where the Court suspects that the admission is made collusively, or to avoid a rule of public policy[3] or where the defendant's failure to deny the allegation is due to ambiguous and unsatisfactory assertions in the plaint[4] or where the defendant is taken by surprise or misunderstands the plaint.[5] The discretion should usually be exercised by the Court of first instance.[6]

6. Rule does not apply where no written statement is filed.—It is clear from the wording of this rule, that it is not intended to apply to a case where the defendant has not put in a written statement. A Court is, therefore, not justified in passing a decree on no evidence where the defendant does not file a written statement.[1]

(a) A bequeaths Rs. 2,000 to B and appoints C his executor and residuary legatee. B dies and D takes out administration to B's effects. C pays Rs. 1,000 as surety for D; then D sues C for the legacy. C cannot set-off the debt of Rs. 1,000 against the legacy, for neither C nor D fills the same character with respect to the legacy as they fill with respect to the payment of the Rs. 1,000.

(b) A dies intestate and in debt to B. C takes out administration to A's effects and B buys part of the effects from C. In a suit for the purchase-money by C against B, the latter cannot set-off the debt against the price, for C fills two different characters, one as the vendor to B, in which he sues B, and the other as representative to A.

(c) A sues B on a bill of exchange. B alleges that A has wrongfully neglected to insure B's goods and is liable to him in compensation which he claims to set off. The amount not being ascertained cannot be set off.

(d) A sues B on a bill of exchange for Rs. 500. B holds a judgment against A for Rs. 1,000. The two claims being both definite pecuniary demands may be set off.

(e) A sues B for compensation on account of trespass. B holds a promissory note for Rs. 1,000 from A and claims to set off that amount against any sum that A may recover in the suit. B may do so, for, as soon as A recovers, both sums are definite pecuniary demands.

(f) A and B sue C for Rs. 1,000. C cannot set off a debt due to him by A alone.

(g) A sues B and C for Rs. 1,000. B cannot set off a debt due to him alone by A.

(h) A owes the partnership firm of B and C, Rs. 1,000. B dies, leaving C surviving. A sues C for a debt of Rs. 1,500 due in his separate character. C may set off the debt of Rs. 1,000.

1. Legislative changes.—

Sub-clause (3) of this rule is new.

2. Scope and applicability of the rule.—The doctrine of set-off may be defined as "the extinction of debts of which two persons are reciprocally debtors to one another, by the credits of which they are reciprocally creditors to one another".[1] A plea of set-off must be distinguished from a plea of payment. A payment refers to a satisfaction or extinguishment of a debt effected prior to the raising of the defence of payment, while a plea set-off prays for a satisfaction or extinguishment hereof commencing in the future after the date of the plea.[2] In order to enable a defendant to claim a set off the following conditions must exist.[3]

(1) The suit must be for recovery of money.

(2) The defendant's claim must be for an ascertained sum of money.

(3) It must be legally recoverable.

(4) Both the parties must fill the same character as they fill in the plaintiff's suit.

(5) The sum claimed by way of set-off should not exceed the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court.

O. 20, R. 19, cl. (1) shows that a decree can be passed in favour of a defendant pleading a set-off; therefore, the defendant is in the position of a plaintiff as regards a set-off pleaded by him.[4] No Court can entertain a plea of set-off if it has no jurisdiction of any kind to entertain a suit, if one is brought for the recovery of the money sought to be set-off.[5]

Where the defendant does not specifically plead a set-off in his written statement, the Court may decline to allow the same to be set up subsequently.[6] Similarly where no issues are framed on the plea and no application is made by the defendant therefor, it is not open to him to raise it in appeal.[7] Nor can a defendant who has failed to claim a set off before decree in a suit, claim it in execution proceedings.[8] Where, however, he states in the written statement that he will file a separate suit in respect of his claim, he is not precluded from proving a set-off afterwards on getting the written statement amended.[9] O. 8, R. 6, Notes 2—3.

Where the defendant sets up a plea of set-off falling under this rule, the Court has no option to refuse to adjudicate on it.[10] But a plaintiff cannot compel a defendant to plead a set off. Thus where a plaintiff in a suit deducted a sum of money due from him to the defendant with a view to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court, it was held that the procedure was illegal and that the plaintiff could not enforce a set-off on the defendant.[11]

3. Suit must be one for the recovery of money.—Under the Code of 1859, it was necessary that the suit should have been for a debt. A set off could not, therefore, be pleaded in a suit for mesne profits, such suit not being for the recovery of a debt.[1] Under the present rule it is sufficient that the suit is one for the recovery of money. The illustrations to this rule show that no matter what the title may be, no matter whether such title arises ex delicto or ex contractu, so long as the relief is sought to recover money, it is a suit for money, and a set off can be pleaded therein under this rule.[2] A suit on a negotiable instrument is a suit for money.[3] But a suit merely for dissolution of a partnership or for an account is not a suit for money,[4] though, if there is also a prayer for the payment of such balance as might be found due to the plaintiff, the suit would be one for the payment of money.[5] A suit to enforce a mortgage under which the right to a personal decree is barred is not a suit for money and no set off can be pleaded therein under this rule.[6]

4. "Any ascertained sum of money."—See illustrations (c), (d) and (e) above. An "ascertained sum of money means a sum of money of which the amount is fixed and known; it does not mean a sum admitted by the other side or decreed by Court; the words are used in contradistinction to unliquidated damages.[1] The mere fact that an arithmetical calculation is necessary to arrive at the total sum cannot render such total an unascertained sum of money.[2] Thus where, in a suit by a landlord against his tenant for rent, the tenant pleaded that he was entitled to set off a commission of three per cent. on the amount of the collections made by him on behalf of the landlord, it was held that the set off was for an ascertained sum of money.[3] But where the set off is in respect of a claim for damages which is not ascertained,[4] or where the amount can be ascertained only on taking accounts[5] or by determining the quantum of the share due to the defendant[6] or where the claim is for interest on a sum due to the defendant fixed by him at an arbitrary rate,[7] this rule will not apply. Unascertained sums may, however, be set off by the consent of parties when they compromise the suit.[8]

5. Equitable set off in cases of unascertained sums of money.—The right to set-off dealt with by this rule is called a legal set-off. But the rule does not take away from the parties any right to set-off which they would have had independently of the Code.[1] Thus in cases of mutual debits and credits, and in cases where cross demands arise out of same transaction, or, are so connected in their nature and circumstances as to make it inequitable that the plaintiff should recover and the defendant driven to a cross suit, Courts of Equity in England have allowed a plea of set off even though the amount may be unascertained. This set-off is known as an equitable set-off and such a right is recognised in this country also apart from the provisions of this rule.[2] The provisions of Order 20, Rule 19, sub-rule 3 also show that this rule is not exhaustive. The distinction, however, between a legal set off and equitable set off is, that, while, in the former case the Court is bound to entertain and adjudicate upon the plea when raised,[3] the defence of equitable set off cannot be claimed as a matter of right[4] but, the Court has a discretion to adjudicate upon it in the same suit or to order it to be dealt with in a separate suit.[5] Thus where a Court thinks that the investigation into the claim of equitable set off will cause great delay it may refuse to allow it[6] or may order the enquiry to proceed on such terms as it thinks fit.[7]

O. 8, R. 6, Note 5.

It is essential for a valid claim to an equitable set off that the cross demands should have arisen out of the same transaction. A plea of equitable set off will not be available where it relates to a different transaction.[8] Thus where a plaintiff who promised to supply seven hundred tons of coal supplied only 469 tons and sued the defendant for the price thereof, the later can claim set-off in respect of damages for the breach of contract caused by the failure to supply the full stock promised.[9] Similarly in a suit for the recovery of the principal and interest due on a mortgage bond the defendant can plead an equitable set off in respect of the loss occasioned by the plaintiff's failure to make repairs while in possession of the mortgaged properties.[10]

Similarly also where a washerman who lost some of the articles given to him to wash, sued his employer for wages, it was held that the latter could equitably set off the price of the articles so lost.[11] In all the above cases it will be seen that the cross demand of the defendant arose out of the same transaction as that on which the plaintiff's claim was based. But where the plaintiff sues a limited company for recovery of dividend payable to him as a shareholder, the company is not entitled to set off damages for breach of a contract by him to deliver cotton.[12] The reason is that the later claim arises out of a different transaction altogether from that on which the plaintiff's claim was based.

6. "Legally recoverable from plaintiff."—Where a legal set off is claimed, it is necessary that the amount set off, must be 'legally recoverable' from the plaintiff. The words 'legally recoverable' have no reference to the ability of the debtor to pay the demand in full; a sum may be legally recoverable, though, in the result, the creditor may be satisfied with a dividend.[1] A sum cannot be said to be 'legally recoverable' where the plaintiff is not bound by law to pay it[2] or where he is not liable to the defendant in respect of that debt;[3] or where the claim is barred by res judicata,[4] or is based upon a decree incapable of execution,[5] or upon a document not receivable in evidence.[6] A barred debt is not legally recoverable and, therefore, in order to enable a defendant to claim a set off under this rule the sum due to him must not have been barred by the law of limitation on the date of the suit.[7] The right to plead this defence arises when the action is brought, so that it does not become barred subsequently by the statute of limitations.[8] A claim which is barred by limitation according to the law of the place where the suit is instituted, but is subsisting according to the lex loci contractus is a legally recoverable claim.[9]

Where A transfers to C a debt due to him by B, C takes it subject to the liabilities and equities to which A is subject as against B, under the provisions of S. 132 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. If B therefore has a legally recoverable claim against A in respect of another debt, he can enforce the same as against C also, by way of set-off.[10] But if the amount of such set-off exceeds the amount of the debt assigned, B can recover nothing from C. He must only sue A for the balance.[11] O. 8, R. 6, Notes 6—7.

In cases of equitable set off, can a barred debt be pleaded by way of set off? It has been held that where there is a fiduciary relationship, as of trustee and cestui qui trust or where there is accountability as between plaintiff and defendant, even barred debts can be set off.[12] But in the undermentioned case[13] the High Court of Madras refused to extend this principle to a case of lessor and lessee and to allow an equitable set off in answer to a suit for rent, on the ground that equity cannot act contrary to the statute of limitations or evade its operation. See also the cases cited below.[13-a]

Where on a plea of set off it is found that money is due to the defendant in excess of that due to the plaintiff, and the defendant's claim is barred on the date of the written statement but not on the date of the plaint, the question arises whether the Court can pass a decree for the balance in favour of the defendant. The High Courts of Madras[14] and Bombay[15] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur[16] have held that the plea is a weapon of defence, upto the amount of the plaintiff's claim but that it is one of attack so far as the amount is in excess of the claim and that, therefore, limitation in regard to its recovery must be determined with reference to the date of the written statement. The Allahabad High Court has, on the other hand, held that a decree could be passed for the balance in favour of the defendant if not barred on the date of the suit.[17]

7. Separate debt not to be set off against joint and several debt.—Illustration (g) to this section adopts the general principle of law that a joint and a separate debt cannot be set off against each other.[1] Where the debt sought to be set off is due jointly to the defendant and another, who is not a party to the suit, it cannot be pleaded by way of set off; for the defendant could not have sued the plaintiff without making the other person a party to the suit.[2]

8. "Not exceeding the limits of the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court."—It has been seen in Note 2, ante that a Court cannot entertain a plea of set off it would have no jurisdiction of any kind to take cognisance thereof. It follows that the value of the claim of set-off must be within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court.[1] Where both the amount of claim and the value of the set off are each within the jurisdiction of the Court, it is immaterial that the combined amount of the two claims is beyond its jurisdiction.[2] The words 'not exceeding the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court' must be construed as applying to the whole of the ascertained sum; therefore, the valuation of the set off for purposes of jurisdiction is the entire sum pleaded and not the difference between the plaintiff's claim and the defendant's claim.[3] But where the plaintiff admits in the plaint any portion of defendant's claim, that portion must be deducted in determining the jurisdiction of the Court to try the set off.[4] In a small cause suit a set off beyond the pecuniary limits of the Small Cause Court's jurisdiction cannot be entertained even though it may be within the pecuniary limits of that Court sitting on the original side.[5]

9. Both parties must fill the same character.—In order to entitle a defendant to plead a set off it is necessary that the parties should fill the same character as they fill in the plaintiff's suit.[1] See also illustrations (a) and (b) to this rule. Thus an amount due to the defendant in the capacity of a manager cannot be set off against a personal claim against him.[2]

10. Winding up proceedings.—A debtor to a company, who is not a member thereof, is entitled in an action by the liquidators to recover the amount due from him, to plead by way of set off an ascertained sum of money due to him from the company, provided it had become payable before the date of suit.[1] But a debt due by the company to a firm of which the defendant is a partner cannot be set off, since the defendant does not fill the same character as in the plaintiff's suit.[2] A member of a company with limited liability, which is under liquidation, is not entitled to set off paid up calls or calls to be paid up against a debt due by him to the company and thus give himself a preference over the other creditors of the company.[3] But in a suit by the liquidator of a company for recovery of money due to the company from a director, the director can plead a set off in respect of sums due to him from the company.[4]

11. Insolvency proceedings.—S. 47 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909) and S. 46 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920) provide for set-off in case of mutual dealings between an insolvent and his creditors. There can be no set-off unless there are mutual dealings.[1] Mutual credits which may be set-off include credits which have a natural tendency to terminate in debts, and not merely credits which must necessarily terminate in debts.[2] This principle of set off in insolvency is a doctrine of equity and its object is not merely to avoid cross actions, but to do substantial justice. Therefore, it cannot be extended to a case where at the time of insolvency the debtor of the insolvent, with full knowledge that the latter has become hopelessly involved, buys a third person's claim against the insolvent in order to relieve himself of the liability of having to pay his just debts.[3]

12. Proceedings under the Agra Tenancy Act and other special Acts.—S 193 (g) of the Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901) provides that no set-off shall be allowed in any suit under that Act except a sum due to the defendant on an unsatisfied decree under that Act or any other enactment repealed thereby.[1] No set off can be allowed, under S. 140 of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), in a suit for arrears of rent.[2] A Revenue Court acting under S. 24 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (X of 1859) has jurisdiction to allow the claim of set off.[3] No set-off, whether legal or equitable shall be pleaded by way of defence to any suit under the Madras Estates Land Act I of 1908.[4]

13. Effect of not claiming set off.—A defendant who has a claim for set-off is not bound to put it forward in answer to the suit against him and his omission to do so does not preclude him from bringing a separate suit in respect of it.[1] But if he does set up such claim, he must do so in respect of the entire amount due. He cannot claim a set-off in respect of a portion only, and subsequently sue for the balance.[2] There is, however, an exception to this rule. 'In all actions for goods sold and delivered with a warranty, or for work and labour, as well as in actions for goods agreed to be supplied according to a contract, it is competent for the defendant to show how much less the subject-matter of the action was worth by reason of the breach of the contract; and to the extent that he obtains or is capable of obtaining an abatement of the price on that account, he must be considered as having received satisfaction for the breach of contract; and he is precluded from recovering in another action to that extent, but no more'.[3]

Illustration.

A, an agent sued B his principal for recovery of money alleged to be due to him on account of advances made by him for purchase of chillies, giving credit in the plaint for the price of 82 bags of chillies belonging to B and sold by him. B then sued A in another Court for damages on the ground that the sale of the 82 bags was unauthorised. B's suit was stayed under S. 10 of the Code. He did not agree to have the question of damages tried by way of set-off in A's suit and a decree was passed in favour of A as claimed in the plaint. Then in B's suit A pleaded that B having already recovered a portion of the damages in his suit, namely, to the extent which he (A) had given credit in his plaint, the claim for the balance is barred. It was held that, the suit was not barred on the principle stated above.[4]

14. Court-fee.—Before this Code was enacted the general trend of opinion among the several Courts was that ad valorem Court-fee must be paid on a written statement pleading a set-off under this rule.[1] It has now been made clear by the amendment of the Court Fees Act referred to in Schedule IV of this Code that Court-fee must be paid on such statements, regarding them as plaints.

But it has been held in the undermentioned cases that written statements pleading equitable set-off, are not chargeable with Court-fee.[2] A plea of set-off should not be entertained by a Court until the Court-fee with respect to it has been paid by the defendant.[3] O. 8, R. 6, Notes 14—16.

15. Counter claim.—A set off is a statutory defence to a plaintiff's action; a counter claim is substantially a cross action. The counter claim need not be an action of the same nature as the original action or even analogous thereto.[1] Though there is no provision in this Code for making a counter claim,[2] a Court has got the power to treat the counter claim as the plaint in a cross suit and hear the two together if the counter claim is properly stamped.[3] It has, however, been held by the Calcutta High Court that it has no such power.[4]

16. Solicitor's lien for costs.—"A solicitor has at Common Law, and apart from any order of the Court or statute, a lien over property recovered or preserved or the proceeds of any judgments obtained for the clients by his exertions."[1] This lien in the High Courts of India is governed exclusively by the law as it existed in English Courts before the passing of 23 and 24 Vic. Ch. 127, by which statute the lien was very much extended.[2] It applies to property of every description including costs ordered to be paid to the client[3] except that it does not attach to real property.[4] But the Calcutta High Court has held in the undermentioned case[5] that it applies to immoveable property also. This lien has priority over any attachment by a judgment-creditor so long as the moneys attached remain within the jurisdiction of the Court; that is, until they are realised and paid off to the judgment-creditor.[6] The Solicitor's lien is a particular lien; it is, therefore, not available for the general balance of account between the solicitor and the client, but extends only to the cost of recovering or preserving the property in question, including the cost of protecting the solicitor's right to such costs and of establishing the lien.[7] Although a defendant has the right to compromise with a plaintiff without the knowledge of the plaintiff's attorney, such compromise must be made with the honest intention of ending the litigation, and not with any design to deprive the attorney of his costs, and he cannot make a payment to the plaintiff under that compromise, if he has notice of the lien for the costs of the plaintiff's attorney.[8] The Court has the power to enforce the solicitor's lien by summary procedure in the suit itself.[9] But where complicated questions of fraud and collusion arise, the solicitor will, as a matter of practice, be referred to a separate suit.[10]

Under sub-R. (2) of this rule a set-off cannot be made so as to affect the lien of the pleader in respect of his costs.[11] Thus costs ordered to be paid by a petitioning-creditor to a debtor when an adjudication in bankruptcy is set aside, cannot be set-off to the prejudice of the solicitor's lien against the debts due to the petitioning-creditor.[12] But it has been held by the Calcutta High Court that this lien is only a claim or right to ask for the intervention of the Court for his protection when, having obtained judgment for his client, he finds there is a probability of the client depriving him of his costs and that the lien is subject to all the equities between the client and the other parties interested in the property, so that it ought not to intercept the right claimed by the judgment-debtor to set-off a prior decree which he had obtained against the client.[13]

17. Appeal.—An appeal does not lie against an order on a preliminary issue disposing of the claim to a legal set-off, advanced by the defendant.[1] The reason is that under O. 20, R. 19 only one decree can in such a case be drawn up and, therefore, it cannot be said that there is a conclusive adjudication within the meaning of S. 2, Cl. 2. An objection cannot be taken up in appeal, for the first time, that a plea of equitable set-off cannot be entertained by the Court.[2]

The valuation of a claim of set-off is the amount claimed by the defendant and an appeal relating to a claim of set-off will lie to the High Court where it exceeds Rs. 5,000.[3] Where a claim of set-off is disposed of without demanding Court-fees from the defendant and the lower appellate Court decides that no Court-fee is necessary, such an omission is only a mere irregularity within the meaning of S. 99 of the Code and is not a ground for reversing the decision in second appeal.[4]

OUDH.

11. Every defendant in a suit or opposite party in any proceeding shall, on the first day of his appearance in Court, file an address (to be called the "registered address") for service on him of any subsequent notice, summons or other process; and, if he fails to do so, shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to have his defence or reply, if any, struck out, and to be placed in the same position as if he had made no defence or reply.

An order under this rule may be passed by the Court, suo motu or on the application of any party.

12. Rules 21, 23 and 25 to 27 of Order 7, shall apply, so far as may be, to addresses for service filed under the preceding rule, and Rule 24 shall, in the same manner, apply but as if the words at the beginning, "In all cases to which Rule 23 does not apply" were omitted.

Add the following Rules:—

11. ''Every party, whether original, added or substituted, who intends to appear and defend any suit or original petition shall on or before the date fixed in the summons or notice served on him as the date of hearing file in Court a proceeding stating his address for service, and if he fails to do so, he shall be liable to have his defence, if any, struck out and be placed in the same position as if he had not defended. In this respect the Court may act suo motu or on the application of any party for an order to such effect, and the Court may make such order as it thinks just.

12. Rules 20 and 22 of Order 7 shall apply, so far as may be, to addresses for service, filed under the preceding rule.''

NAGPUR.

Rules 11 to 13 (new). Add the following as Rules 11 to 13:—

11. Every defendant in a suit or opposite party in any proceedings, shall, on the first day of his appearance in Court, file an address for service on him of any subsequent process. The address shall be within the local limits of the civil district in which the suit or petition is filed or of the civil district in which the party ordinarily resides, if within the limits of the Central Provinces and Berar. This address shall be called the ''registered address'' and it shall hold good throughout interlocutory proceedings and appeals and also for a further period of two years from the date of final decision and for all purposes including those of execution.

Registered address.

O. 8, R.10.

12. (1) If the defendant or the opposite party fails to file a registered address as required by Rule 11, he shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to have his defence struck out and to be placed in the same position as if he had made no defence.

Consequence of non-filing of registered address.

An order under this rule may be passed by the Court suo motu or on the application of any party.

(2) Where the Court has struck out the defence under sub-Rule (1) and has adjourned the hearing of the suit or the proceeding and where the defendant or the opposite party at or before such hearing appears and assigns sufficient cause for his failure to file the registered address he may upon such terms as the Court directs as to costs or otherwise be heard in answer to the suit or the proceeding as if the defence had not been struck out.

(3) Where the Court has struck out the defence under sub-Rule (1) and has consequently passed a decree or order, the defendant or the opposite party, as the case may be, may apply to the Court by which the decree or order was passed for an order to set aside the decree or order; and if he files a registered address and satisfies the Court that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from filing the address, the Court shall make an order setting aside the decree or order as against him upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit or proceeding.

Provided that where a decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against such defendant or opposite party only it may be set aside as against all or any of the other defendants or opposite parties.

13. Rules 20, 22 and 23 of Order 7, shall apply, so far as may be, to addresses for services filed under Rule 11."

SIND.

Add the following as Rules 11 and 12 in Order 8:—

11. Parties to file addresses.—Every party whether original, added or substituted, who appears in any suit or other proceeding shall, on or before the date fixed in the summons or notice served on him, as the date of hearing, file in Court, a memorandum in writing stating his address for service and if he fails to do so he shall be liable to have his defence, if any, struck out and to be placed in the same position as if he had not defended. In this respect the Court may act suo motu or on the application of any party for an order to such effect, and the Court may make such order as it thinks just:

Provided that this rule shall not apply to a defendant who has filed a written statement, but who is examined by the Court under S. 7 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1879, or otherwise, or in any case where the Court permits the address for service to be given by a party on a date later than that specified in this rule.

12. Applicability of Rules 20 and 22-26 of Order 7 to addresses for service.—Rules 20, 22, 23, 24, 25 and 26 of Order 7, shall apply so far as may be, to addresses for service filed under the last preceding rule.

BOMBAY.

The following shall be added as Rules 11 and 12 in Order 8:—

"11. Every party, whether original, added or substituted, who appears in any suit or other proceeding shall on or before the date fixed in the summons or notice served on him as the date of hearing, file in Court, a memorandum in writing stating his address for service, and if he fails to do so, he shall be liable to have his defence, if any, struck out and to be placed in the same position as if he had not defended. In this respect the Court may act suo motu or on the application of any party for an order to such effect, and the Court may make such order as it thinks fit:

Parties to file addresses.

Provided that this rule shall not apply to a defendant who has not filed a written statement but who is examined by the Court under S. 7 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists'

Relief Act, 1879, or otherwise, or in any case where the Court permits the address for service to be given by a party on a date later than that specified in this rule. O. 8, R.10, Note 1.

Applicability of Rr. 20 and 22-26 of O. 7 to addresses for service.

12. Rules 20, 22, 23, 24, 25 and 26 of Order 7 shall apply, so far as may be, to addresses for service filed under the last preceding rule."

Synopsis.

1. Scope.
2. Appeal.

Pronounce judgment. See Note 1, Pt. (10).
Written statement not filed—Court's power to decree suit. See Note 1, Pts. (1) to (3) and (11).

1. Scope.—It has been held by the High Court of Rangoon that the power given to the Court by this rule to pronounce judgment refers to a written statement which has been demanded by the Court under Rule 9.[1] But according to Mr. Justice Ayling of the High Court of Madras,[2]—and the Chief Court of Oudh[3] also seems to take the same view—this rule relates back to Rule 1, as well as to Rule 9, and, therefore, applies to written statements required by the Court under Rule 1, as well. Mr. Justice Seshagiri Ayyar took a contrary view.

This rule applies only to a specific requirement by the Court to the filing of a written statement and not to general direction in the summons that such a statement may be filed.[4] The High Court of Bombay has held in the undermentioned case[5] that a Court has no power to call upon a plaintiff to put in a written statement except in answer to a set off, and to dismiss the suit on his failure to do so. It has been already submitted in notes to Rule 9 that this view is not correct. A conditional order, as for instance, an order directing a statement, if any, to be filed[6] or an order merely permitting a statement to be filed[7] will not entail the penalty imposed by this rule. Where a party files a written statement expressing his inability to supply the particulars asked for by the Court, it is not a failure to present a written statement within the meaning of this rule.[8]

The Court cannot strike out a defence for failure of the defendant to present a further written statement called for by it.[9] A judgment pronounced under this rule must satisfy the requirements of 'judgment' as defined in S. 2, sub-S. 9 and, therefore, the Court should go into the case and pronounce a decision upon the facts so far as they are before it.[10] A plaintiff is not entitled to obtain a decree before the date on which the summons is returnable

Rule 11 (Lahore).

This rule applies to defendants who are corporations as well as to other defendants.[1] The rule is mandatory so far as the filing of the proceeding stating the addresses for service is concerned; but the matter is left to the discretion of the Court and it is not bound to strike off the defence of the defaulting party in every case.[2]

ORDER IX.

APPEARANCE OF PARTIES AND CONSEQUENCE OF NON-APPEARANCE.

O. 9, R. 1, Note 1.

R. 1. [S. 96.] On the day fixed in the summons for the defendant to appear and answer, the parties shall be in attendance at the Court-house in person or by their respective pleaders, and the suit shall then be heard unless the hearing is adjourned to a future day fixed by the Court.

Parties to appear on day fixed in summons for defendant to appear and answer.

a re-hearing.[9]

2. Applicability of O. 9 to applications under O. 9 itself.—Where an application under R. 4 or R. 9 or R. 13 of this order is itself dismissed for default, does a fresh application to restore that application lie? There is a conflict of opinion on this point. It has been held by the High Courts of Lahore,[1] Madras,[2] Rangoon,[3] the Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur,[4] and the Chief Court of Oudh[5] that such an application can be filed, the reason being the proceedings contemplated under O. 9, are in the nature of an original suit and that by virtue of S. 141, O. 9, applies to them. On the other hand, the High Courts of Bombay,[6] Calcutta,[6-a] and Patna[7] have held that a second application to restore a prior application dimissed for default does not lie. But High Courts of Allahabad,[8] and Calcutta[9] have struck a via media and held that the application for restoration can itself be treated as a second application for restoring the suit provided there is no bar by limitation. In later cases the same High Courts have held that in a proper case the Court can also restore a prior application dismissed for default under its inherent powers.[10]

But no appeal lies under O. 43, R. 1, from an order refusing to restore an application dismissed for default.[11]

R. 2. [S. 97.] Where on the day so fixed it is found that the summons has not been served upon the defendant in consequence of the failure of the plaintiff to pay the court-fee or postal charges (if any) chargeable for such service, the court may make an order that the suit be dismissed:

Dismissal of suit where summons not served in consequence of plaintiff's failure to pay costs.

Provided that no such order shall be made although the summons has not been served upon the defendant, if on the day fixed for him to appear and answer he attends in person or by agent when he is allowed to appear by agent.

1. Scope of the rule.
2. "Defendant."
3. Failure to pay Court-fee or charges— When entails dismissal.
4. Plaintiff's remedy after dismissal.
5. Appeal.
6. Revision.

On the day so fixed. See Note 3, Pt. (8). Proviso. See Note 3, Pt. (7).

1. Scope of the rule.—The rule applies only to cases of plaintiff's failure to pay process fee or postal charges for service of summons on the defendant. Consequently the Court cannot dismiss the suit under this rule for failure on the part of the plaintiff to furnish the correct address of the defendant.[1] The Allahabad High Court has held in the undermentioned case[2] that where the plaintiff failed to pay the process fee and the Court ordered him to pay a certain sum as damages and he failed to pay that also, the Court can dismiss the suit under this rule.

The failure contemplated is not merely an omission to pay the requisite charges but also to pay the same within the time fixed.[3]

2. 'Defendant'.—The word 'defendant' does not include the guardian ad litem of a minor defendant as he is not a defendant in the legal sense of the term and the mere fact that no process fee is paid for issuing notice to such a guardian is no ground for dismissing the suit under this rule[1] especially where there are other major defendants in the suit.[2] Where the summons has been served upon a wrong person instead of on the real defendant, and he appears and denies his liability, the proper order to pass is to dismiss the suit with costs.[3]

3. Failure to pay Court-fee or charges.—When entails dismissal.—O. 48, R. 1, sub-Rule 2 requires that the Court shall fix a time for payment of the process fee. And unless it so fixes a time for the deposit of the process fee[1] and gives the party reasonable time and opportunity to comply with its orders[2] it cannot dismiss the suit. But mere ignorance on the part of the plaintiff's agent as to the proper Court in which the process fees ought to be deposited is no ground for not dismissing the suit.[3]

There is a conflict of opinion as to whether the failure on the part of the plaintiff to pay process fees for a newly added defendant, will entail the dismissal of the whole suit. The High Court of Bombay has held that the whole suit ought to be dismissed even against the original defendant unless he waives his objection thereto.[4] But according to the Allahabad[5] and Patna[6] High Courts the dismissal should be only against that particular defendant. According to the proviso, if notwithstanding the plaintiff's default in paying the process fees the defendant appears, the Court cannot dismiss the suit.[7] It follows that this Court cannot dismiss the suit on a day previous to the date fixed in the summons for the appearance of the defendant.[8]

4. Plaintiff's remedy after dismissal.—The plaintiff can apply under R. 4 to set aside the order of dismissal or may bring a fresh suit.[1]

5. Appeal.—The order of dismissal is not a decree within S. 2 (2) and no appeal lies therefrom[1]; the undermentioned decisions to the contrary[2] under old Act are no longer good law.

6. Revision.—Where under O. 5, R. 10 as amended in Punjab the plaintiff has an option to have the summons served in the ordinary way or by registered post and the Court ordered the plaintiff to pay both process fees and postal charges, the order is illegal and the suit cannot be dismissed for

1. Where neither party appears.—A dismissal under this rule is justified only where neither party appears. Thus if the plaintiff[1] or his agent[2] or his pleader duly instructed[3] is present, the fact that no evidence is adduced will not enable the Court to order a dismissal under this rule. If, however, both the parties are absent, the mere presence of the pleaders without instructions is not an appearance and a dismissal under this rule is justified.[4]

Where the plaintiff and some of the defendants do not appear but the other defendants appear and the suit is dismissed, the dismissal, in so far as it is against the absent defendants is under this rule, while, as against the defendant or defendants who appeared, it is under Rule 8.[5]

Where an application was filed by the respondent in an appeal praying that the appellant should be called upon to give security for the costs of the appeal and, on the day fixed for the hearing of the application, both parties were absent in consequence of which the application was rejected, it was held that the dismissal must be taken to be one under this rule read with S. 141.[6]

2. "Appearance".—See O. 9, R. 9 and O. 3, R. 1.

3. "When the suit is called on for hearing".—The hearing referred to is obviously the first hearing after the issue of the summons to the defendant,[1] and not necessarily a hearing of evidence.[2] But when read with O. 17, R. 2, infra, this rule may be applied to cases where the parties are absent at the adjourned hearings. Thus it may be applied where the parties are absent at a hearing after remand.[3]

But before there can be a dismissal under this rule it is essential that the suit should have been posted to a specified day for hearing and that the parties have notice thereof. Thus it is not proper to dismiss a suit on a date of which the parties had no previous notice[4] or at a place not notified[5] or on a day fixed for considering only an application for amendment of the issues.[6] Similarly when a day is fixed merely for the appearance of the guardian ad litem of a minor defendant[7] or for the attendance of the plaintiff only,[8] a dismissal of the suit on that day under this rule is not justified. A day fixed for judgment is not a day fixed for the hearing of the suit.[9] Where on a day fixed for the hearing of a preliminary issue, of proof of which the onus lies on the defendant and both the parties are absent, the Court ought not to dismiss the suit for default but should decide that issue against the defendant especially in a case where a portion of the claim is admitted.[10]

After a preliminary decree has been passed the suit cannot be dismissed for default of appearance; the reason is that on the passing of the decree the parties acquire rights or incur liabilities which become fixed unless and until the decree is varied or set aside.[11]

4. "The Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed."—Under the old Code the expression used was "the suit shall be dismissed" and, the Judge was bound to dismiss the suit unless, for reasons to be recorded, he otherwise directed.[1] But under the present rule a discretion is given to the Court in the matter of dismissing the suit. O. 9, R. 3, Notes 4—6.

The Court has no power to strike a case off its file but can only make an order dismissing the suit.[2] Where, however, the parties state that the case is settled and at their request the case is struck off, it is not a dismissal for default under this rule.[3]

5. Dismissal pending arbitration proceedings.—When a suit is referred to arbitration and is pending before the arbitrator, the Court has no power to dismiss the suit for default under this rule unless an express order superseding the reference to arbitration is passed.[1]

6. Appeal and review.—A dismissal under this rule is not a decree within S. 2 (2) and, therefore, no appeal lies.[1] The use of the word "order" makes it clear beyond doubt that the dismissal is not a decree.

It has been held in the undermentioned case that such an order is not open to review.[2]

R. 4. [S. 99.] Where a suit is dismissed under rule 2 or rule 3, the plaintiff may (subject to the law of limitation) bring a fresh suit; or he may apply for an order to set the dismissal aside, and if he satisfies the Court that there was sufficient cause for his not paying the Court-fee and postal charges (if any) required within the time fixed before the issue of the summons, or for his non-appearance, as the case may be, the Court shall make an order setting aside the dismissal and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit. Plaintiff's remedies. See Note 1, Pts. (1) and (2).

1. Scope of the rule.—Where a suit is dismissed under R. 2 or R. 3, or under O. 17, R. 2, read with these rules a fresh suit is not barred.[1] It may be brought notwithstanding the fact that no application for restoration has been made under this rule or even after an application under this rule has proved unsuccessful.[2] The two remedies are not mutually exclusive. But the period covered by the restoration proceedings under this rule cannot be excluded under S. 14 of the Limitation Act for the purpose of the suit.[3]

It is only the Court which passes the order of dismissal that can set it aside under this rule.[4] Unlike R. 7, 9 or 13 the present rule does not authorise the Court to impose any terms as to costs.[5] The effect of a restoration of the suit under this rule is to bring the suit back as regards parties to the same position in which it was at the time of dismissal.[6] Where there are more plaintiffs than one, the suit can be restored on the application of anyone of them.[7]

2. "Sufficient cause".—An order under this rule without giving the applicant an opportunity to show sufficient cause is ultra vires.[1] As to what is sufficient cause is a matter of discretion and no hard and fast rule can be laid down.[2] Where the plaintiff is prevented from attending Court due to unavoidable causes, e.g., picketting by volunteers of Gandhi, it was held that there was sufficient cause for non-appearance.[3] A bona fide mistake which is not unreasonable is a sufficient cause to order restoration.[4] But the mere fact that the summons has been returned unserved on the defendant is no ground for setting aside the order of dismissal.[5] (See also Notes under R. 9.) Sub-Rule (1) has been newly substituted for the old sub-rule by the Amending Act, XXIV of 1920, thus effecting the following important changes:—

(1) The period during which the plaintiff may remain without applying for fresh summons is reduced from one year to three months.

(2) The words "shall make an order" have been used in the place of the words 'may make an order'.

(3) Provision has been made in sub-clause (c) for extension of time for making the application referred to.

O. 9, R. 5, Notes 2—5.

2. "Period of three months"—Computation of.—Under the old Code the period fixed was one year[1] and it was calculated, not from the filing of the plaint, but from the return of the summons unserved.[2] The question also arose whether the period was to be calculated from the date of the return of the serving-officer or from the date of the return of the officer whose duty it was to certify to the Court the return of the serving-officer. It was held in the undermentioned case[3] that the period was to be calculated from the date of the return made by the latter officer. Effect has been given to that decision in the present rule.

3. Fresh summons, when granted.—The plaintiff must apply for fresh summons within the prescribed period, i.e., three months, from the date of the return of non-service on the defendant.[1] If he wants an extension of time he has to apply to the Court within three months and satisfy the Court as to any of the circumstances mentioned in sub-clauses (a), (b) and (c).[2]

4. Failure to take fresh summons does not discharge the defendant from any liability.—Failure on the part of the plaintiff to take fresh summons and the consequent dismissal of the suit does not take away the liability of the defendant and does not operate as res judicata in a fresh suit against him.[1] Nor can a co-defendant plead that he is only a surety and that, as the other defendant who is the principal debtor is not served, he is not liable.[2] Where, however, the records of a suit were consigned to the record-room owing to the non-service of summons on one of the defendants, a subsequent suit against the same defendant on the same cause of action was held to be barred, on the ground that the suit must be deemed to be still pending.[3]

5. Appeal.—The words 'shall make an order that the suit be dismissed' in the place of "may dismiss the suit" occurring in the old Code make it perfectly clear that the dismissal under this rule is not appealable as a decree. This rule does not apply to appeals as O. 41 contains specific rules covering corresponding cases that arise in appeal.[1]

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule contemplates the hearing of the suit on the day fixed in the summons whereas O. 17, R. 2 contemplates the hearing of the suit on some later date to which the hearing may be adjourned.[1] Thus if the defendant had already appeared in answer to the summons but fails to appear at the adjourned hearing the case falls under O. 17, R. 2,[2] though the procedure contemplated in either case is the same.[3] When an appearance under O. 9 is in question the word "hearing" means the first day of the hearing.[4]

The fact that the summons may have directed the defendant to file a written statement does not authorise the Court to proceed under O. 8, R. 10; if the defendant does not appear, the proper procedure is that prescribed under this rule.[5]

2. Ex-parte decree.—The plaintiff is not entitled to have the suit declared ex parte before the returnable date fixed in the summons.[1] Before proceeding ex parte the Court must be satisfied that there is due service of summons on the defendant.[2] An ex parte proceeding ought not to be taken on the basis of service effected by registered post.[3] The onus of proving due service is, of course, on the plaintiff.[4]

The Code does not prescribe any procedure to be followed in the case of an ex parte suit. The practice is that no issues are framed, though the plaintiff is called upon to prove his case.[5] The plaintiff is bound to prove his case to the satisfaction of the Court and his burden is not any the less lightened because the defendant is absent.[6] Except in suits relating to the Negotiable Instruments, as under O. 37, R. 2, evidence should be adduced by the plaintiff[7] and a prima facie case made out.[8] The Court is bound to consider the interests of the absent defendant and not to rely on evidence otherwise unreliable simply because the case is ex parte.[9]

3. Remedies in the case of an ex parte decree.—A defendant against whom an ex parte decree has been passed can—

(1) apply under R. 13, infra, to set aside the ex parte decree, or

(2) appeal from the decree under S. 96, or

(3) apply for a review under O. 47, R. 1.[1]

If the non-service or failure to effect due service is due to plaintiff's default the Court is bound to order him to pay the costs of the postponement under sub-Rule 2.[1]

6. Sufficient time—Cl. (c).—The words 'duly served' means served in sufficient time to enable the defendant to appear in person or by a pleader[1] and the Court is bound under sub-clause (c) to direct fresh summons if he is not served in sufficient time.

If the defendant though not served in sufficient time nevertheless appears and asks for time, the Court is not justified in refusing it and proceeding ex parte. By his appearing he should not be placed in a worse position than he would be in if he had not appeared at all.[2] be liberal in construing this rule and should not take a stringent view of the defendant's absence.[2] O. 9, R. 7, Notes 1—2.

The rejection of an application under this rule is no bar to an application under R. 13 after the passing of an ex parte decree.[3]

2. "Assigns good cause".—If the defendant wants to set aside the order placing him ex parte and be relegated to the stage at which the suit was, when he absented himself, then he has to assign good cause for his previous absence. But if he merely wants to take part in the proceedings at the stage at which it is, when he appears, it is not necessary to get the previous order placing him ex parte set aside. The reason is that the rule is not intended to be penal and by the very fact of his appearance the proceedings cease to be ex parte thenceforth.[1]

Though the rule gives a discretion to the Court to impose terms, failure to do so is not an irregular or improper exercise of discretion such as to justify interference in revision.[2]

R. 8. [S. 102.] Where the defendant appears and the plaintiff does not appear when the suit is called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order that the suit be dismissed unless the defendant admits the claim, or part thereof, in which case the Court shall pass a decree against the defendant upon such admission, and, where part only of the claim has been admitted, shall dismiss the suit so far as it relates to the remainder. O. 9, R. 8, Notes 1—3.

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule deals with the procedure to be followed when the plaintiff does not appear and the defendant alone appears. In such a case, the only thing that the defendant is entitled to claim is to have the plaintiff's suit dismissed. He is not entitled to call evidence to disprove charges of fraud, etc., made against him in the plaint.[1-a]

The Court has no power to dismiss a suit for default under this rule where the plaintiff dies. Such an order of dismissal is a nullity, the reason being that the rules applicable to a defaulter cannot be applied to a dead man.[1] Similarly a dismissal under this rule is not proper if the plaintiff has been adjudicated insolvent before the hearing, as there is none on the record who is bound to appear; the Court should, in such a case, act under O. 22, R. 8.[2]

Where a reference to arbitration in a suit provided that the arbitrator should hear evidence and determine the case and that if one of the parties failed to appear, he should have power to proceed ex parte, the arbitrator cannot, on failure of one of the parties to appear, act under the provisions of this rule.[3]

2. Appearance.—See Notes under the same heading in Rule 9, infra.

3. "When a suit is called on for hearing."—The hearing of the suit may be either on the day named in the summons or a subsequent day to which the hearing may be adjourned.[1] The date fixed for the settlement of issues is as much a day fixed for the hearing as any other date fixed.[2]

A dismissal of a suit at an adjourned hearing, for default of plaintiff's appearance is under the provision of O. 17, R. 2 read with this rule.[3] As will be seen from the provisions of O. 17, infra, a dismissal under R. 2 of that order can be set aside under the provisions of O. 9 and the suit restored, while, if the dismissal is under R. 3 of that order the remedy of the party aggrieved is only by way of appeal or of review and not by an application for restoration under O. 9, R. 9.[4] O. 9, R. 8, Note 3.

A Court will not be justified in dismissing a suit under this rule where the evidence on record is sufficient to decree the claim of the plaintiff,[5] or where the evidence has been completely recorded and nothing remains to be done except to hear arguments,[6] or where the suit was adjourned in the course of arguments,[7] or for pronouncing judgment.[8] Similarly where part of the plaintiff's claim was fully determined by a preliminary order and the rest of the claim was abandoned, the Court is not justified in dismissing the suit for default.[9] A failure to amend the plaint as per order of Court and to pay costs of the adjournment does not justify a dismissal of the suit for default after the evidence is finished.[10]

It is not proper for the Court to dismiss the suit on a day not fixed for the hearing of the suit[11] as, for example, when the day was fixed for the appointment of a guardian ad litem of a minor defendant,[12] or on a day which is not duly notified to the parties[13] or on holidays.[14] Nor should the Court hastily dismiss a suit for non-appearance when the suit is pending reference to arbitration and when the arbitrator had applied for extension of time to make the award.[15] Where a commissioner has been appointed and he has not made his report the suit cannot be heard until the commissioner has finished his work and there can be no dismissal for default.[16] After a decree has once been made a suit cannot be dismissed for default.[17] Thus there can be no dismissal under this rule after a preliminary decree for partition and if an order is so made, it is passed without jurisdiction.[18] The Court should in such cases adjourn the suit sine die with liberty to the plaintiff to apply to restore the suit to the list on payment of costs.[19]

4. More plaintiffs than one.—This rule is meant to provide for a case where a single plaintiff does not appear or, where there are several plaintiffs, and all of them do not appear.[1] Cases where some only of several plaintiffs do not appear, are provided for, in R. 10, infra.

5. More defendants than one.—Under this rule there can be a partial or total dismissal for default.[1] As has been seen in the Notes to R. 3 supra, so far as the defendant or defendants who appear are concerned, the order of dismissal will be one under this rule and will bar a fresh suit against them. With regard to the defendants who are absent, the dismissal will be under R. 3 and a fresh suit is not barred.[2] Even if the defendant appears and applies for time, the dismissal would fall only under this rule and not under R. 3.[3]

6. "Shall make an order that the suit be dismissed".—These words were substituted under the present Code to make it clear that the dismissal is not a decree but only an order which is not appealable.[1] The earlier decisions[2] which held that the dismissal under this rule was a decree are now no longer law.

The Court has no option under this rule but to dismiss the suit and is not justified in enquiring into the merits of the case[3] or received evidence or record statement from the defendant.[4] Where, however, the plaintiff has already let in evidence, it may decide the suit on the merits on such evidence.[5] While dismissing under this rule the Court has no jurisdiction to add any proviso in the order, as, for example, that the order shall not prejudice the interest of the minor plaintiff.[6] Striking off the suit is not a proper mode of dismissing a suit under this rule.[7]

A filed a suit against B for recovery of a certain amount of money which had been paid under protest, and also for damages for wrongful attachment. The Court framed a preliminary issue on the question whether the suit so far as the return of the money was concerned, disclosed a cause of action, and after hearing arguments dismissed that part of the claim with costs and directed the suit to proceed as regards the claim for damages. No decree was drawn up in respect of the portion dismissed. When the suit came on for hearing the plaintiff was absent and the Court dismissed the whole suit for default under this rule. It was held by the Privy Council that the dismissal for default under this rule was wrong so far as the recovery of money was concerned, inasmuch as a final decision had been passed thereon on the merits, and that, therefore, an appeal lay so far as such portion was concerned.[8]

7. Unless the defendant admits.—When the defendant admits the claim of the plaintiff either in whole or in part the Court cannot dismiss the suit but must pass a decree for the amount admitted.[1]

Where, however, the admission of the defendant is not in reality an admission of the claim of the plaintiff, e.g., where the plaintiff claims to pre-empt on a payment of Rs. 1,500 and the defendant admits the right of the plaintiff to pre-empt but states that the price is Rs. 12,000 the Court, cannot pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff under this rule for pre-emption on payment of Rs. 12,000 but must, on default by the plaintiff, dismiss the suit.[2]

The word 'claim' is not necessarily synonymous with the amount sued for. It may refer to the right claimed irrespective of the amount stated in the relief column.[3] A decree passed on the admission of the defendant is appealable.[4]

8. Effect of dismissal under this rule.—Unlike the dismissal of a suit under R. 3, a dismissal under this rule precludes a fresh suit on the same cause of action.[1] But two other remedies are open to the plaintiff:—

O. 9, R. 8, Notes 8—9.

(1) to apply under the next rule for restoration of the suit, or

(2) to apply for a review of the order.[2]

It is not necessary that the plaintiff should apply under R. 9 before applying for a review[3] and there is nothing in the Code to limit the parties to one particular remedy. But a review will not lie except on the grounds mentioned in O. 47, R. 1. It has been held by the High Court of Bombay in the undermentioned case[4] that where a suit is dismissed under O. 9, R. 8 there could be no such grounds for review as those mentioned in O. 47, R. 1, inasmuch as the fact that the applicant was absent when the suit is called on for hearing is neither a discovery of any new and important matter, nor an error apparent on the face of the record, nor a ground analogous to any of those specified in the rule. There is a conflict of opinion as to whether the plaintiff who has failed to make an application within thirty days under O. 9, R. 9 can be allowed to prefer an application for review. The High Courts of Patna[5] and Lahore,[6] held that he cannot be allowed to do so, on the ground that the law of limitation should not be allowed to be evaded in that way. The High Courts of Madras[7] and Calcutta[8] on the other hand, have held that such an application would lie and that the fact that the plaintiff will get a longer period of limitation by the adoption of a particular remedy is no ground for refusing him relief.

9. Revision.—Where the Court refuses to act under this rule in a case to which the rule applies[1] or acts under this rule illegally or with material irregularity[2] or acts in excess of its jurisdiction under this rule,[3] a revision will lie.

Whether rule applies to execution proceedings. See R. 1, Note 1.

1. Scope of the rule.—The remedy provided for by this rule is not open to a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed for any reason, other than default of appearance under R. 8.[1] Hence, no application lies under this rule where the dismissal is under O. 17, R. 3[2] or O. 11, R. 21,[3] or where the dismissal is due to a failure on the part of the plaintiff to adduce evidence,[4] or where the plaint is rejected under O. 7, R. 11 for failure to pay deficient Court-fees.[5] The rule applies only to suits and not to appeal.[6] It applies also to suits under S. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, which are dismissed for default. That section bars only a review and not an application for rehearing.[6-8] As to the restoration of appeals dismissed for default of appearance of the appellants, see O. 41, R. 19.

The Court cannot suo motu order a restoration without an application on the part of the plaintiff.[7] The word "plaintiff" has been held to include his legal representatives who can also therefore apply under this rule.[8] No fresh vakalathnama is necessary for an application under this rule.[9]

The effect of restoration under O. 9, R. 9 is to bring the suit, as regards parties to the exact position in which it was at the time of dismissal.[10]

2. "Appearance.", meaning of.—The term appearance has nowhere been defined in the Code and it must be understood in reference to the particular subject-matter to which it relates.[1] "Appearance" in O. 9 means either:

(a) by the party in person, or

(b) by a pleader either himself duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit or accompanied by some other person able to do so.[2]

For a full discussion, see O. 3, R. 1, ante.

3. Appearance in person.—See Note 4 to O. 3, R. 1.

4. Appearance by pleader.—See Note 6 to O. 3, R. 1.

5. Bar of fresh suit.—Where a suit is dismissed for default under this rule, it cannot be said to have been heard and decided on the merits and therefore cannot operate as res judicata.[1] But the plaintiff is, under the specific provisions of this rule barred from bringing a fresh suit on the same cause of action[2] and the fact that the mode of relief claimed in the subsequent suit is different will not be a ground for not applying the bar under this rule.[3] Thus a suit on the basis of entries in the plaintiff's account book, in respect of the same sum of money for which a prior suit on a promissory note given therefor had been dismissed for default will be barred under this rule.[4] Similarly where a suit filed by the voluntary liquidator of a company against an alleged shareholder for the recovery of a sum of money due to the company is dismissed for default under this rule a subsequent application by the official liquidator to have the name of the defendant placed in the list of contributories in respect of the same claim is barred.[5]

O. 9, R. 9, Note 5.

Where the cause of action in the subsequent suit is different from that in the first suit this rule will not apply.[6] Thus a suit for partition dismissed for default under this rule does not bar a subsequent suit for partition. The reason is that the right to enforce partition is a continuous right which is a legal incident of a joint tenancy and which enures so long as the joint tenancy continues.[7] See Note 36 to S. 11, ante. As regards suits for redemption, it was held by the Privy Council in Shanker Baksh v. Daya Shanker[8] that where a first suit for redemption was dismissed for default under this rule, a second suit for redemption will be barred as being based on the same cause of action. The Allahabad[9] and Bombay[10] High Courts have, however, distinguished the said decision of the Privy Council on the ground that their Lordships did not consider the effect of S. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, and that the effect of that section is not to bar a second suit for redemption.

The rule does not apply unless the plaintiff in the prior suit is the plaintiff in the subsequent suit.[11] Thus a dismissal for default of a suit by a

Hindu widow in respect of her deceased husband's estate is no bar to a fresh suit by the reversioner in respect of the same matter.[12]

6. Suit—Meaning of.—According to the High Courts of Allahabad[1] and Calcutta[2] the rule is plainly intended to apply only to suits and not to applications such as applications for probate. But the High Court of Madras has held that the present rule applies to such applications which, under S. 83 of the Probate and Administration Act, are treated as suits.[3]

The bar under this rule does not apply to a fresh application for adjudication as insolvent after the dismissal of a prior application for default.[4] Nor does it apply to the annulment of an order of adjudication owing to default.[5] The reason is that S. 10, cl. (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act itself provides for a remedy in such cases.

The rule does not apply to applications under S. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.[6]

See also Note 5 to S. 2, sub-cl. (2) and Note 21 to S. 11.

7. Minor plaintiff.—A suit by a minor is liable to be dismissed for default of appearance on the part of the next friend[1] and the provisions of this rule cannot be nullified because the plaintiff happens to be a minor.[2] But where the next friend is guilty of gross negligence in the conduct of the suit, the minor can bring a fresh suit, notwithstanding this rule, either himself after attaining majority or through another next friend.[3] He can also apply under this rule for setting aside the order of dismissal.[4]

8. "Sufficient cause".—The only ground for restoring a suit under this rule is the existence of a sufficient cause for the non-appearance of the party at the time the suit was called on for hearing.[1] The term "sufficient cause" has not been defined anywhere.[2] It is a question of fact depending upon the circumstances of each case[3] and is not subject to any hard and fast rule except that the Court must exercise a judicial discretion in the matter.[4] O. 9, R. 9, Note 8.

Absence of party.—A generous construction should be placed on the enactment to restore a suit dismissed for default,[5] and a party should not be deprived of a hearing unless there has been something equivalent to misconduct or gross negligence on his part.[6] The test to be applied as a general rule is to see whether the party applying, honestly intended to be present at the hearing of the suit and did his best to do so.[7] The High Court of Allahabad has, in the undermentioned case[8] held that even though the plaintiff was negligent enough to start for the last train and missed it, the suit ought to be restored, observing that negligence is human and not irreparable and can be amply compresented by costs. The following grounds have been held to be sufficient causes for the absence of the party within the meaning of this Rule 13.

(1) A bona fide mistake which is not unreasonable or for which the party is not responsible.[9] Thus where the Bench Clerk gave a wrong date of hearing[10] or where the suit is dismissed on a date not fixed for hearing[11] or where the day fixed for hearing is a holiday[12] or where the suit is transferred without notice to the parties[13] or where the suit is called on after 5 P.M.

O. 9, R. 9, Note 8.

Absence of pleader.—In the case of absence of the pleader, it should be considered whether there was a bona fide and reasonable attempt on the part of the vakil to put in appearance; and due regard must be had to the exigencies of his professional duties.[26] Thus where the pleader was sitting in the adjoining Court-room and did not hear the suit being called but soon after dismissal appeared and applied for restoration[27] or where the pleader was sitting in the Bar-room and by the time he could come up the case was called and dismissed[28] or when the suit was called for hearing the party or his agent went to fetch his pleader who was engaged in a different Court and the Court in the meantime dismissed the suit[29] it was held to be sufficient cause. Similarly when the pleader could not attend owing to illness and had no time to make fresh arrangements[30] or where the pleader who was ill, entrusted the brief to another pleader who was also unavoidably absent[31] it was held that there was sufficient cause for non-appearance. Where the absence of the vakil is due to a bona fide mistake, e.g., where the vakil noted in his diary the date of hearing which was on the 23rd of March as 23rd of April[42] or where by the mistake of the pleader the party did not get intimation in time[33] the suit was ordered to be restored to file. But the mere absence of a party's pleader[34] or the fact that the pleader was engaged elsewhere[35] does not amount to sufficient cause. The fact that in the District Court pleaders take up cases in different Courts and cannot be present at one and the same time in all the Courts[36] or a mere misjudgment on the part of the counsel who does not state that he was engaged elsewhere[37] or the ignorance of the party as to what for the suit was posted on a particular day[39] or the mere fact that the agent or vakil was negligent[39] will not suffice.

The mere fact that a party is contemplating to file an appeal against the preliminary decree will be no sufficient ground for restoring the final decree passed ex parte.[40]

O. 9. R. 9, Notes 9—12.

9. Restoration of suit in favour of one of several plaintiffs—Whether can operate in favour of all.—An order under this rule restoring a suit dismissed for default on the application of one of several plaintiffs may if the Court so directs, operate in favour of all the plaintiffs though they have not applied for restoration.[1]

10. Inherent power of Court to order restoration.—See Note 2 to S. 151 ante.

11. Limitation.—An application for restoration under this rule should be made within 30 days of the order of dismissal for default (see Limitation Act, Article 163). The Court has no power inherent or otherwise to extend the period of limitation prescribed therefor,[1] and if the Court restores on application presented after time the High Court can interfere in revision as the order is one made without jurisdiction.[2] Section 5 of the Limitation Act, does not apply to this rule[3] unless the High Court has extended its application by a rule framed under Section 122. The Bombay High Court has added a proviso extending the application of S. 5 to this rule.[4]

A mere notice that an application is going to be moved on a future date will not prevent the running of limitation.[5]

12. Appeal.—A dismissal of an application under this rule is appealable under O. 43, R. 1, cl. (c)[1] but no appeal lies from an order granting an application.[2] Nor can the propriety of such an order be questioned in the regular appeal preferred against the decree eventually passed, as the order does not affect the merits of the case within the meaning of S. 105.[3]

An order made by a Judge on the Original Side of the High Court rejecting an application for restoration is a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. (15) of the Letters Patent, and is appealable,[4] whereas an order granting an application has been held not to be a "judgment" within that clause.[5]

13. Revision.—A revision lies to the High Court against an order granting an application under this rule.[1] Thus where a trial Court found that the grounds alleged were not sufficient but ordered restoration as a matter of grace[2] or where the order is one made without jurisdiction, or an erroneous refusal to exercise jurisdiction[3] or the order is made summarily without recording evidence[4] or reasons[5] it has been held that a revision lies. The question what is sufficient cause is a matter in the Court's discretion and the High Court will not ordinarily interfere in revision with the exercise of such discretion.[6] O. 9, R. 9, Note 13.

O. 9, R.11, Note 1.

Synopsis.

1. Non-attendance of defendants.

1. Non-attendance of defendants.—The rule contemplates that a decree may be a contested one as against some of the defendants and ex parte against the rest[1] but the decree is liable to be set aside on an application by the ex parte defendant or defendants.[2] The Court should, under this rule pass such order as it thinks fit against the absent defendants. Where no such order is passed against them but a decree is passed simply against some defendants, the decree is not ex parte against the absent defendants and cannot be re-opened under R. 13.[3]

The Court should not pass a decree in an ex parte case, without any proof whatever by the plaintiff; it should consider the interests of the absent party.[4]

O. 9, R.12, Note 1.

R. 12. [S. 107.] Where a plaintiff or defendant, who has been ordered to appear in person, does not appear in person, or show sufficient cause to the satisfaction of the Court for failing so ts appear, he shall be subject to all the provisions of the foregoing rules applicable to plaintiffs and defendants, respectively, who do not appear.

Consequence of non-attendance, without sufficient cause shown, of party ordered to appear in person.

1. Scope of the rule.—The words "under the provisions of Section 66 or S. 436" after the words "appear in person" which occurred in the old Code have now been omitted. The result is that the rule applies to all cases where the Court has ordered a person to appear whether or not the Court is specifically empowered to do so.[1] Where there is a failure to attend on the part of a party, the fact that his pleader is present[2] or the party ordered to appear happens to be the next friend of a minor plaintiff[3] will not prevent the Court from acting under this rule. But all the same, the dismissal for non-attendance being a highly penal matter, it ought not to be inflicted on a party unless there is a distinct order to attend and upon proof that the party had deliberately disobeyed the same.[4] An opportunity should be given to prove the cause of his non-appearance.[5] Thus when plaintiff was ordered to appear on a particular day and the case was not taken up that day, the Court ought not to dismiss the suit for failure of the plaintiff to appear on a subsequent day to which the case was adjourned.[6] Where one of several plaintiffs fails to appear in obedience to the order of Court, the suit cannot be dismissed as against other co-plaintiffs also.[7]

2. "Subject to all the provisions of the foreign rules".—These words indicate that the Court can act under the provisions of the foregoing rules, i.e., dismiss the suit for default or proceed ex parte. The very fact that the Court is empowered to proceed under the foregoing rules also indicates that the party aggrieved has the corresponding right of applying for restoration either under R. 9 or R. 13 as the case may be.

3. Appeal.—A plaintiff whose suit is dismissed under this rule for failure to appear can apply under R. 9 for restoration of the suit but cannot appeal from the order of the dismissal as it is not a decree.[1]

SETTING ASIDE DECREES EX PARTE.

O. 9, R. 13.

R. 13. [S. 108.] In any case in which a decree is passed ex parte against a defendant, he may apply to the Court by which the decree was passed for an order to set it aside; and if he satisfies the Court that the summons was not duly served, or that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order setting aside the decree as against him upon such terms as to costs, payment into Court or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit:

Setting aside decree ex parte against defendant.

Provided that where the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against such defendant only it may be set aside as against all or any of the other defendants also.

Make the following amendments to Order 9, Rule 13:—

(1) Re-number Rule 13 as Rule 13 (1).

Insert the following as proviso to sub-Rule (1) of Rule 13 of Order 9:—

"Provided further that no Court shall set aside a decree passed ex parte merely on the ground that there has been an irregularity in the service of summons, if it be satisfied that the defendant had notice of the date of hearing in sufficient time to appear and answer the plaintiff's claim."

(2) Add the following as sub-Rule (2) to Rule 13—"(2) The provisions of S. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, shall apply to application under sub-Rule (1)."

ALLAHABAD.

Add the following further proviso:—

Provided also that no such decree shall be set aside merely on the ground of irregularity in the service of summons, if the Court is satisfied that the defendant knew, or but for his wilful conduct would have known of the date of hearing in sufficient time to enable him to appear and answer the plaintiff's claim.

BOMBAY.

Rule 13 shall be numbered as Rule 13 (1), and the following sub-rule shall be added to it, namely:—

"(2). The provisions of S. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, shall apply to applications made under this rule."

RANGOON.

Add the following as second proviso to Rule 13:—

"Provided also that no decree or order shall be set aside under this rule merely on the ground that there has been an irregularity in the service of the summons, if the Court is satisfied that the defendant was aware of the date of hearing in sufficient time to enable him to appear and answer the plaintiff's claim."

Substitute "decree or order" for "decree" wherever this word occurs in Rule 13.

OUDH.

In Rule 13, between the words "was not duly served or that" and the words "he was prevented by any sufficient cause", insert the words "notwithstanding due service of the summons", and at the end of the rule add the following proviso:—

"Provided also that no ex parte decree shall be set aside under this rule on the ground that the summons was not duly served, if the Court is satisfied that the defendant had information of the date of hearing sufficient to enable him to appear and answer the plaintiff's claim.

Explanation.—Where a summons has been served under Order 5, Rule 15, on an adult male member having an interest adverse to that of the defendant in the subject-matter of the suit, it shall not be deemed to have been duly served within the meaning of this rule."

NAGPUR.

Order 9, Rule 13.

Add the following as an additional proviso:—

"Provided also that no such decree shall be set aside merely on the ground of irregularity in service of summons, if the Court is satisfied that the defendant knew, or but for his wilful conduct would have known of the date of hearing in sufficient time to enable him to appear and answer the plaintiff's claim.

Explanation.—Where a summons has been served under Order 5, Rule 15, on an adult male member having an interest adverse to that of the defendant in the subject-matter of the suit, it shall not be deemed to have been duly served within the meaning of this rule."

SIND.

O. 9, R. 13, Notes 1—2.

Add the following further proviso to Rule 13 in Order 9:—

Provided also that a decree passed ex parte shall not in the absence of good cause be set aside on the ground merely of irregularity in the service of the summons unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied that the defendant did not have notice of the date of hearing in sufficient time to appear and answer the plaintiff's claim.

N.-W. F. P.

Add "Provided further that no decree passed ex parte shall be set aside merely on the ground of an irregularity in the service of summons, if the Court is satisfied for reasons to be recorded that the defendant knowledge of the date of hearing in sufficient time to appear on that date and answer the claim."

1. Legislative changes:—

The words "as against him" after the words "shall make an order setting aside the decree" have been newly added with a view to make it clear that the ex parte decree can only be set aside in favour of the defendant against whom it has been passed, unless it be that the proviso applies.[1]

The proviso to the rule is also new.

2. Scope of the rule.—The object of the rule is to ensure, within reasonable limits to public convenience, that every defendant shall have a hearing,[1] and to place the successful applicant in the same position in which he would have been if no decree had been passed against him.[1-a] An application under this rule is not strictly speaking an application for a re-hearing although it may result in it.[2] The proceedings contemplated are not merely a branch of the suit which terminated when the ex parte decree was passed; the suit itself does not revive until after the proceedings in the application are terminated successfully.[3] The rule applies to suits[3-a] and not to appeals[4] in as much as, separate and corresponding provisions have been made in O. 41 therefor. This rule applies to orders passed ex parte in insolvency proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act, V of 1920, by virtue of S. 5 of that Act[5] and also to decrees in arbitration proceedings under Sch. II of the Code.[6]

3. Applicability to execution proceedings.—See Note under Rule 1 supra.

4. Decree passed by the Presidency Court of Small Causes.—S. 37 of the Presidency Small Causes Courts Act, XV of 1882, declaring the finality of small cause decrees, does not apply to an ex parte decree and an application will consequently lie under this rule to set it aside.[1] Where an application is made under this rule and is dismissed, an application cannot be made under S. 38 of that Act for a new trial.[2] It was held in the case noted below[3] that under the Rules framed by the Calcutta High Court, the Registrar of the Court of Presidency Small Causes had no jurisdiction to entertain an application under this rule.

O. 9, R. 13, Notes 5—6.

5. Decree passed by the Provincial Court of Small Causes.—S. 17 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act (IX of 1887) requires the deposit of the decretal amount or the furnishing of security as a condition precedent to the entertaining of an application to set aside an ex parte decree.[1] The Court is however competent under S. 5 of the Limitation Act to excuse the delay in the matter of the deposit even though the application has been presented in time.[2]

6. When a decree can be said to be ex parte.—The present rule is limited to decrees made ex parte under the provisions of O. 9 and does not govern other decrees, though ex parte, unless O. 9 has been extended to those decrees by other provisions in the Code.[1] Thus where a suit is decided under O. 17, R. 3[2] or O. 11, R. 21[3] the decree is not ex parte so as to entitle the defendant to apply under this rule. The reason is that the Court is not empowered under those rules to proceed under O. 9. The decree referred to is clearly a decree passed either at the first hearing under R. 6 of this order[4] or at an adjourned hearing under O. 17, R. 2 read with R. 9.[5] Under O. 17, R. 2 specific provision is made for the Court to proceed under O. 9 and the aggrieved party is also entitled in such a case to the remedy provided for by this rule.[6] A decree passed on default of appearance of the defendant at the hearing of a remanded suit is nevertheless an ex parte decree.[7]

A decree cannot be ex parte when there is evidence already on record and the Court goes into the merits before decreeing the suit.[8] Thus where both the parties have led in their evidence and nothing remains to be done except arguments, the Court ought not to proceed to pass an ex parte decree.[9] Similarly, where the defendant who has been summoned as a witness by the plaintiff fails to appear, the Court is not justified in passing an ex parte decree when the pleader for the defendant is ready to proceed with the case.[10] Where the defendant actually appears, a mere failure on his part to adduce evidence will not make the decree passed, an ex parte decree.[11]

Where a compromise decree is passed in a suit and a party applies to set it aside on the ground that the applicant was no party to the compromise and that he had given no authority to file the compromise, there is a conflict of opinion as to whether the application can be treated as one under this rule for which see the following cases.[11-a]

The recitals on the record are not conclusive as to the character of the decree[12] and the defendant is entitled to show that the decree is, as a matter of fact, ex parte.[13]

7. Where written statement filed.—Where the defendant has filed a written statement in the case but fails to appear when the suit is called on for hearing, the decree passed is nevertheless an ex parte decree and can be set aside under this rule.[1]

8. Remedies in the case of an ex parte decree.—A defendant against whom an ex parte decree has been passed has three courses open to him viz.:—

(1) to apply under this rule to set aside the ex parte decree[1] or

(2) to apply for a review[2] or

(3) to appeal from the decree[3]

See also Note 12 to S. 96, ante.

9. Whether the remedies are concurrent.—As to whether and how far the remedies 1 and 3 referred to in Note 8, ante are concurrent, see Note 12 to S. 96.

The defendant may apply for a review without applying under this rule[1] or even after an application under this rule has been rejected.[2] According to the High Courts of Calcutta[3] and Madras[4] the fact that an application for a review is made at a time when an application under this rule would be barred by limitation, is no ground for refusing a review. But the High Court of Lahore[5] has held contra, namely that no review can be granted in such a case and that the defendant cannot be allowed to evade the law of limitation. It is submitted that the former view is correct. If the party is entitled to a review, he is equally entitled to apply for the same within the period of limitation prescribed therefor and not for any other application.

10. Hearing of application pending appeal.—As has been seen in Note 12 to S. 96 ante, the mere filing of an appeal does not take away the jurisdiction of the trial Court to entertain an application under this rule. In fact, such an application ought to be presented to the Court which passed the decree[1] for, the decree continues to be the decree of the primary Court until it is reversed, confirmed or varied in appeal.[2] The proceedings under this rule and in an appeal are entirely distinct in their scope and purpose and there is no possibility of any conflict between the judgments to be pronounced in the two proceedings.[3]

Where a decree is ex parte against some defendants and contested against the rest, and the contesting defendants alone appeal without impleading the ex parte defendants as respondents, the application by the ex parte defendants ought to be made only to the trial Court.[4] Even if the ex parte defendants have been impleaded as pro forma respondents in appeal it has been held by the Allahabad[5] and Madras[6] High Courts that the proper Court to which application ought to be made is the trial Court; the proper course in such a case is to get an adjournment of the hearing of the appeal to enable the party to apply to the trial Court, and not wait till the disposal of the appeal.

11. Hearing of application after disposal of appeal.—As has been seen already in Notes 2 and 12 to S. 96 where an ex parte decree has been confirmed in appeal, the Court of first instance has no jurisdiction to entertain or dispose of an application to set aside the decree, and if it does so its action is ultra vires.[1] The reason is the decree of the trial Court becomes superseded or merged in that of the appellate Court[2] and the result of allowing an application would be to interfere with the decree of a superior Court, viz., the appellate Court.[3] The High Court of Madras has, however, held in two recent decisions[4] that even after the disposal of the appeal the trial Court has jurisdiction to entertain and dispose of such an application. It is submitted that this view is opposed to the decision of the Privy Council in Brij Narain v. Tejpal Bikram,[5] and is not correct on principle.

But where the decree of the trial Court is not superseded or does not get merged in the appellate decree, the trial Court has power to entertain and deal with the application to set aside the ex parte decree. Thus where the appeal is dismissed for default, there is no decree of the appellate Court which can be said to supersede the decree of the trial Court so as to prevent the defendant from applying to the trial court.[6] Similarly where the appeal is dismissed as having abated by reason of the omission of the appellant to implead the legal representatives of the deceased respondents there is no merger of the decree of the trial Court in the decree of the appellate Court.[7] Again when the ex parte defendants are not impleaded as parties to the appeal by other defendants, the decree of the appellate Court does not prevent them from applying to the trial Court under this rule.[8] which confirmed the preliminary decree that has got the jurisdiction to entertain the application.[9]

12. Suit to set aside an ex parte decree—Ex parte decree obtained by fraud.—As has been seen in Note 61 to S. 9 fraud vitiates the most solemn transactions. A suit will, therefore, lie to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground of fraud.[1] Thus if the plaintiff suppresses the fact of a compromise effected and obtains an ex parte decree, the decree can be set aside by a separate suit.[2] If the decree is tainted with fraud, any sale which has taken place in pursuance of the decree can also be set aside.[3] But the fraud alleged must be extraneous to everything which has been adjudicated upon by the Court and the defendant cannot be allowed to get round the rule of res judicata by simply proving that the ex parte judgment is wrong.[4]

In a suit to set aside the ex parte decree on the ground of fraud the onus lies on the party suing to show that there was some fraud in relation to the proceedings of the Court.[5] The mere fact that a decree is ex parte does not show that there has been no service of summons. On the other hand, the presumption is that the Court was satisfied as to due service of summons before proceeding ex parte.[6]

A suit is maintainable notwithstanding the fact that it has not been preceded by an application under this rule[7] or that an application was filed under this rule and proved infructious.[8] But no suit can be entertained where the only question submitted is one that could, and should have been dealt with under this rule.[9] For instance, where the only fraud alleged is bare non-service of summons, no suit can succeed.[10] It is quite a different matter, however, where the whole suit is attacked on the ground of fraud and the incident of improper or defective service is relied on as one of the indicia of fraud.[11] As the Judicial Commitee observed in Khagendra Nath v. Pran Nath (29 Cal. 395 P.C.) O. 9, R. 13 assumes the existence of a real suit and has no application where the suit itself is attacked on the ground of fraud and the fraudulent and violent incidents of its progress e.g., at the stage of service is treated as parts and indicia of a whole. A fraudulent suppression in the matter of the service of summons can afford a sufficient ground for setting aside the ex parte decree.[12] Thus where the plaintiff got summons served on a wrong person suppressing the father's name of the real defendant, and knowing full well that the defendant was not a partner. got him impleaded as a partner, it was held that the decree was tainted with fraud.[13] Similarly where the plaintiff falsely and intentionally represented to the Court that the defendant was away in a distant place and got substituted service effected, the decree passed in the case was held to be vitiated by fraud.[14]

The mere fact that the ex parte decree has been procured by false or perjured evidence is no ground for setting it aside. Something more should be proved in support of the allegation of fraud.[15]

Where the very question of fraud has been already in issue and agitated between the same parties and decided upon in an application under this rule, the decision will operate as res judicata in a separate suit.[16]

The question whether the original suit itself is revived after the ex parte decree in that suit has been set aside in a subsequent suit, depends on the issues and the actual decision in the later suit.[17]

O. 9, R. 13, Notes 12—15.

If the ex parte decree be not set aside it is final and will operate as res-judicata.[18]

(See also Note 19 to Section 11).

13. Application to be made to the Court which passed the decree.—The application under this rule ought to be made to the Court which passed the decree though the presiding judge may be different.[1] Where, however, by reason of territorial re-adjustment, the Court itself becomes different, the defendant is not debarred from applying to the Court which is seized of the matter.[2]

According to the undermentioned cases of the High Court of Madras[3] an application should be made only to the trial Court even after disposal of the appeal against the ex parte decree. This view, as has been seen in Note 11 above, cannot be accepted as correct.

In an earlier decision of the same High Court[4] it was held that the High Court can, in second appeal, entertain an application for setting aside an ex-parte decree passed by the trial Court.

14. Fresh vakalatnamah, if necessary.—A pleader who had duly appeared in the suit is not obliged to file a fresh vakalatnama for the purpose of an application under this rule.[1]

15. Who can apply to set aside.—The application under this rule is not limited to the case of a sole defendant who has not appeared or, where there are more defendants than one, none of them had appeared; any one of several defendants against whom the decree is ex parte can apply.[1] But a person who is not a party though he may be interested in the suit is not entitled to apply under this rule.[2] Nor can a person who though a formal party but against whom nothing is said in the operative portion of the decree[3] or who has been expressly exempted from the decree, apply under this rule.[4] It follows that a person against whom the suit is dismissed cannot apply.[5]

O. 9, R. 13, Notes 15—17.

The Court cannot suo motu set aside an ex parte decree without there being an application by the party.[6]

16. Application by the legal representative of the defendant.—When a defendant dies after an ex parte decree is made against him, his legal representative can apply under this rule to set it aside.[1] The reason is the legal representative enjoys the same rights and liabilities as the original defendant. The contrary view expressed by the High Court of Madras in the undermentioned case[2] that the section only authorises applications by the defendant against whom an ex parte decree was passed is not correct under the present Code having regard to S. 146.

Where proceedings under this rule have been already initiated by the defendant his legal representative is entitled to continue the same.[3] See also S. 146 Notes 2 and 7 for fuller discussion.

17. Grounds for setting aside an ex parte decree.—In an application under this rule, the Court has to satisfy itself (a) whether the summons has not been duly served or (b) whether the applicant has been prevented by sufficient cause from appearing.[1] The words in the rule are imperative and if either of these conditions are satisfied, the Court is bound to set aside the ex-parte decree and cannot refuse it on any other ground.[2] Thus the fact that the defendant did not take out summons to his witnesses is no ground for refusing the application if otherwise the conditions of this rule are satisfied.[3] Conversely, where either of these conditions are not satisfied the Court has no jurisdiction to grant the application for any other reason.[4]

The Court should decide upon evidence[5] or proper affidavits[6] and come to a definite finding as to the facts alleged in the application.[7] An application under this Rule in rent suits under the Bengal Tenancy Act,[8] and the Orissa

Tenancy Act[9] must contain a statement of the injury sustained by the applicant by the ex parte decree, and must in the case of the former Act, also be accompanied by a deposit in Court of the amount of rent admitted due by the applicant unless the Court otherwise directs.

O. 9, R. 13, Notes 17—18.

18. Summons not duly served.—The onus of proving that the summons has not been duly served is upon the applicant claiming the benefit of this rule.[1] If he makes out, that the necessary proof of due service required by R. 6 was not given before the Court proceeded ex parte, the decree ought to be set aside.[2] But a mere assertion of ignorance on the part of the defendant is not enough to prove want of due service.[3] The Court must decide the matter upon enquiry and upon evidence.[4]

Although in the first instance the onus lies on the applicant to prove due service, it will shift to the opposite party where the service is not on the defendant personally but on his gumastah, and he must show that the provisions of O. 5, R. 12 or 13 were complied with.[5] It is necessary in each case for the Court to see that the serving officer has used all due and reasonable diligence with a view to find out the defendant before affixing the summons.[6]

The word "duly served" would appear to relate to the method of service.[7] Where the summons has not been served because it contained the wrong name of the defendant's father;[8] or where the summons is served, not upon the defendant, but on his brother;[9] or where the service is by registered post, and the defendant denies receipt of the same;[10] or where, in the case of a substituted service, there is nothing on record to show that the provision of O. 5, Rr. 19 and 20 were complied with;[11] or where the defendant is not served in sufficient time to enable him to appear and defend[12] the Court is justified in setting aside the ex parte decree. The unrebutted oath of the applicant that he was not served has been held to be sufficient proof of non-service.[13]

O. 9, R. 13, Notes 18—20.

Appearance before the registration of suit in a proceeding for the appointment of a guardian ad litem does not dispense with the service of suit summons.[14] Where the summons has not been duly served the fact that the defendant knew of the suit, will be no ground for not restoring the suit.[15] Where, however, the defendant has refused the summons[16] or has wilfully or carelessly failed to appear after due service[17] the ex parte decree cannot be set aside. Similarly, a mere irregularity in service of summons on a co-defendant[18] or on the defendant himself, where he had waived the irregularity by accepting the summons, are not sufficient to set aside the ex parte decree.[19]

The summons referred to is the first summons issued to the defendant giving him notice of suit and not of any application made during the course of the suit.[20]

See also O. 5 generally.

19. Sufficient cause.—See Notes under the same heading in R. 9 "sufficient cause". It may, among other things, include a fraudulent suppression of summons from the knowledge of the defendant.[1]

20. Minor defendant.—If a minor defendant is properly represented in the suit an ex parte decree is as binding upon him as a decree in a contested suit,[1] and cannot be set aside on the ground that he has not been served with the notice of the intention to appoint a Court-Officer as guardian ad litem.[2] As to whether a minor can apply to set aside an ex parte decree where he has not been properly represented, there is a conflict of judicial opinion. The High Court of Madras[3] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur[4] have held that the minor in such a case cannot be regarded as a party to the suit at all, that the decree passed is, in effect, a nullity and the Court cannot re-open the suit under this rule. On the other hand, the High Courts of Allahabad,[5] Bombay,[6] Calcutta,[7] Patna,[8] and the Chief Court of Oudh[9] have held that he is entitled to apply under this rule. The Allahabad High Court has also held that the fact that the minor is not properly represented, is itself a sufficient cause for setting aside the decree.[10] But the mere fact that the guardian did not appear or that the Court guardian failed to appear owing to want of instructions[11] or that there are mere irregularities in the matter of the appointment of a guardian[12] is not a sufficient ground for setting aside the ex parte decree.

It is however open to the minor to impeach an ex parte decree got against him by a separate suit in cases where he can show that the guardian has been guilty of fraud or gross negligence[13] and if his interests were prejudiced thereby.[14] The fact that he has not applied under this rule is no bar to the suit.[15]

21. Decree having been satisfied.—The fact that an ex parte decree has been satisfied does not disentitle the defendant from applying under this rule.[1]

22. "Upon such terms as to costs etc".—The Court has a wide discretion in imposing such terms on the applicant as it thinks fit before setting aside the ex parte decree; thus it may order him to deposit the decretal amount in Court especially when the bona fides of his defence are not free from doubt[1] or it may order the payment of costs.[2] It may also impose a condition that the applicant should find a surety who would be responsible for any amount that may be found due by him under any decree that may be subsequently passed[3] and direct that the security should be in cash or in property.[4] Where the conditions are not strictly carried out the order becomes inoperative and the ex parte decree will remain valid.[5] The Court can extend the time fixed for payment of the costs or of the decree amount either under S. 148 or under its inherent powers.[6] The Court ought not, however, to impose very onerous

terms on the applicant.[7]

An order giving time to pay the decree amount under this rule does not of itself operate as a stay of execution of the ex parte decree.[8]

23. Proviso to the rule.—It cannot be laid down as an inflexible rule that whenever an order is made under this rule its effect is to set aside the whole decree. The true test is whether the suit as framed can be maintained and a decree made in favour of the plaintiff even if the other defendant or defendants against whom the decree has been made ex parte were not impleaded as parties.[1] Thus, where A filed a suit for rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act against X, Y and Z and a decree was passed ex parte against all the defendants, but Z applied to have the ex parte decree set aside on the ground that she was not duly served with summons, it was held that the whole decree should not be set aside inasmuch as a decree for the whole rent could have been passed against X and Y alone without impleading Z.[2]

But where the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside against only the defendant applying under this rule, it may be set aside wholly against all the defendants including those who have not applied or even those against whom a decree has been passed on the merits. The following are some of the classes of cases in which the decree cannot be set aside only as against the defendant applying without setting it aside as against the other defendants also:—

1. Where the decree is joint and indivisible.[3]

Illustration.

A, B and C, who are co-parceners of a joint Hindu family together execute a mortgage to X. X files a suit against all of them. C alone is served, but none of them appear and an ex parte decree is passed against all. A and B alone apply under this rule for setting aside the decree. Here the decree being one and indivisible it ought to be set aside as against C also.[4]

Where the decree is not joint and indivisible[5] as e.g., where the suit is to obtain possession of separate items of properties from separate sets of defendants[6] or where the decree itself is divisible and each of the defendants have separate defences the whole decree need not be set aside.[7]

2. Where the decree proceeds on a ground common to all the defendants.[8]

Illustration.

A sues B and C on a promissory note. B is the principal-debtor and C is the surety. An ex parte decree is passed against both. B alone applies to set aside the decree and shows sufficient cause for his absence. The decree ought to be set aside against C also as the liability of both is based on a common ground.[9]

Where, however, the decree does not proceed on a common ground [10] and the defence of the several defendants are distinct or peculiar to each of them,[11] the whole decree ought not to be set aside. Thus where A sues B and C on a promissory note, on the allegation that B is the executant of the promissory note and that B and C (his nephew), are members of an undivided Hindu family of which B is the manager, and after the passing of an ex parte decree against both, C alone applies to set aside the decree, the proper course is to set aside the decree only as against C and not as against B also inasmuch as his liability is based on the ground that he executed the promissory note while the liability of C is based on the distinct ground that the debt was binding upon him and his defence is peculiar and not common to that of B.[12]

3. Where it is necessary that the whole decree should be re-opened in the interests of justice[13] or, in other words, where the relief to which the applicant is entitled to cannot effectively be given except by setting aside the decree against the other defendants also. Thus in the case of an ex parte decree against several mortgagors it has been held that the better course would be to set aside the decree against all the defendants.[14]

Illustration.

A files a suit against B, C and D on a mortgage bond and gets an ex parte decree against all of them. B alone applies to set aside the decree. Neither in the mortgage bond nor in the plaint nor in the decree is there any specification of the shares and liabilities of the several defendants. The decree ought to be set aside against all the defendants.[15]

4. When the suit would result in two inconsistent decrees if the ex parte decree be not set aside against the other defendants also.[16]

Illustration.

(i) X sues A and B, two joint executants of a promissory note for the recovery of the amount due thereunder. B has, as a matter of fact, paid the amount due to X. B is not served and does not appear and A, who is served also does not appear and an ex parte decree is passed against both. B applies to set aside the decree. Can the decree be set aside against A also? Yes. The reason is that, if B succeeds at the hearing in proving the payment, the result of not setting aside the decree against A also would be two inconsistent decrees.[17]

(ii) A sues B and C alleging that they are in joint possession of a certain immoveable property and asking for a declaration that he is in joint possession with them. B alone is served but not C and there is an ex parte decree against both. C applies for a re-hearing under this rule. The decree ought to be set aside against B also because if C establishes at the hearing that A has no title whatsoever to the property, the result will be two inconsistent decrees one against B and another against C.[18]

The principles above referred to equally applies to cases where the decree is ex parte against some of the defendants and contested against the rest.[19] Thus where the decree is one and indivisible, it can be set aside against all;[20] but where it is divisible it can be set aside only as against the defendant applying.[21] The undermentioned cases[22] which lay down that the whole decree cannot be set aside where some defendants contest the suit, are, it is submitted, not correct.

24. Inherent power of Court to set aside an ex parte decree.—See Note 2, S. 151.

25. Effect of setting aside the ex parte decree.—The effect of setting aside the ex parte decree is to restore the parties to the position they previously occupied[1] and the Court should proceed to decide the suit as it stood before the decree.[2] The trial of the suit should commence de novo as against the persons in whose favour the decree was set aside and the evidence that had been taken in the ex parte proceedings should not be used against them.[3] Any attachment that has been issued[4] or any sale that has taken place in pursuance of the ex parte decree[5] becomes null and void and the Court can also order restitution except as against a stranger auction-purchaser of anything taken in execution of the decree.[6]

But, the setting aside of an ex parte final decree does not have the effect of vacating the preliminary decree.[7]

26. Ex parte decree against a firm.—An ex parte decree passed against a firm after it has been served in the manner contemplated by O. 30 cannot be set aside on the application of a partner who alleges that he has not been duly served; it can never be said that a decree against a firm is ex parte against one of its partners because he has not appeared.[1] Where, however, the applicant denies that he is a partner of the firm along with other defendants the Court can enquire into the matter and set aside the decree.[2]

27. Dismissal of an application to set aside an ex parte decree—If can be restored.—See Note 2 to R. 1, supra.

28. Limitation.—In an application under this rule the Court has first of all to see that the application is presented within the prescribed period of limitation.[1] The article applicable is 164 of the Indian Limitation Act IX of 1908, under which the defendant can apply within thirty days from the date of the decree or, where the summons is not duly served, within thirty days from the date of his knowledge of the decree.[2] The Court has no power inherent or otherwise to enlarge the period of limitation.[3] S. 5 of the Limitation Act is not applicable to this rule unless the High Court under its rule making powers extends its application.[4] The Madras High Court has added a proviso to this rule, extending S. 5 of the Limitation Act to applications under this rule.[5] S. 22 of the Limitation Act does not apply to this rule.[6] Nor can the time spent in prosecuting an application under this rule be excluded in computing the period of limitation for appeals.[7]

The onus of proving that the application is within thirty days of the knowledge of the decree is upon the applicant.[8] But a vague knowledge that some decree has been passed by some Court is not enough to start limitation against the applicant.[9] In the case of an application to set aside an ex parte

final decree it has been held that limitation starts from the date of the decree as it is not necessary to give a fresh notice before the passing of the final decree.[10]

"Duly served" in Article 164 means served in such a manner as to give the defendant information of the proceedings taken against him.[11] In the case of a substituted service, time begins to run from the date of the decree as the service is deemed to be due service,[12] unless the defendant can show the circumstances under which substituted service could legally be ordered did not exist.[13]

Under the Limitation Act of 1877, the period prescribed was thirty days from the date of executing any process for enforcing the judgment.[14] [As to how the thirty days was computed, see the undermentioned cases.[15]]

The law applicable after 1st January, 1909, is Article 164 of the Limitation Act of 1908 and not that of 1877, even though the ex parte decree was passed when the Act of 1877 was in force.[16] Where the right to apply is barred under the Act of 1877 and the bar arose before the Act of 1908 came into force the provisions of the latter Act cannot revive the right so barred.[17]

29. Appeal.—The rule contemplates 3 classes of order:—[1]

(1) Order setting aside the ex parte.

(2) Order setting aside the ex parte decree on certain terms.

(3) Order rejecting the application to set aside the decree.

No appeal lies from an order falling under cl. 1.[2] As to whether an error, defect or irregularity in passing such an order can be made a ground of objection under S. 105 of the Code in an appeal from the final decree, see Note 6 to S. 105, supra. it was held in the undermentioned cases under the Code of 1877, that it could be objected to in appeal.[3]

O. 9, R. 13, Notes 29—30.

In the second class of cases where the Court passes a conditional order, e.g., where, on the failure of the applicant to comply with certain terms, it is ordered that the petition will stand dismissed, the question arises whether the order by itself is appealable. It has been held by the High Courts of Bombay and Madras that the rejection in O. 43, R. 1, cl. (d) signifies an immediate rejection and not a conditional or prospective rejection[4] and, therefore, it is only the final order passed on failure to fulfil the conditions imposed, that is appealable. The High Court of Allahabad has, however, taken a contrary view.[5]

In the third class of cases the order is appealable under O. 43, R. 1, cl. (d)[6] whether the rejection is on the merits or on default.[7] The appellate Court may in such an appeal remand the application for enquiry.[8] The fact that a final decree has been passed in the case is no ground for refusing to entertain an appeal from an order rejecting an application to set aside an ex parte preliminary decree as, in the present Code the two decrees are independent and separate.[9] As to whether the propriety of the order of rejection can be questioned in an appeal from the ex parte decree, see Note 12 to S. 96.

30. Revision.—An order setting aside an ex parte decree not being appealable a revision will lie therefrom if the conditions of S. 115 of the Code are satisfied.[1] Where the order of the lower Court is passed in defiance of the provisions of this rule,[2] e.g., where the Court refuses to set aside the ex parte decree even though the summons has not been properly served[3] or where the lower Court refuses to exercise its jurisdiction[4] or where it decides the application on an erroneous view of the law of limitation[5] or where it has not given a finding as to sufficient cause[6] or did not make any enquiry,[7] a revision will lie.

But a revision is not competent where there are other remedies open to the aggrieved party.[8] Thus the High Court will not interfere on a finding of fact as to sufficient cause or otherwise[9] or interfere with any of the conditions imposed by the Court in the exercise of its discretion.[10] Similarly where the party has acquiesced in the order of the trial Court by accepting costs he cannot apply for a revision.[11]

A dismissal of an application under this rule cannot be said to be a denial of the right of fair trial so as to justify the interference of the High Court under S. 107 of the Government of India Act.[12]

BOMBAY.

The following shall be added as Rule 15:—

"In the application of this order to appeals, so far as may be, the word 'plaintiff' shall be held to include an appellant, the word 'defendant a respondent, and the word 'suit' an appeal."

Synopsis.

1. Notice to opposite party.

1. Notice to opposite party.—The rule is imperative that no ex parte decree can be set aside without notice to the opposite party so as to give him an opportunity to be heard.[1] A mere oral notice given to a pleader who appeared in execution proceedings in connection with the same decree but who was different from the pleader who appeared in the suit[2] or a service on plaintiff's pleader in the absence of any order of the Court,[3] or a service on plaintiff's chela[4] has been held to be not sufficient.

The word "opposite party" means such of the persons to the suit as are interested in opposing the application. It does not include a Court auction-purchaser[5] or an attaching decree-holder who has attached the ex parte decree[6] or a co-defendant in a case.[7]

ORDER X.

Examination of Parties by the Court.

O. 10, R.1.

R. 1. [S. 117.] At the first hearing of the suit the Court shall ascertain from each party or his pleader whether he admits or denies such allegations of fact as are made in the plaint or written statement (if any) of the opposite party, and as are not expressly or by necessary implication admitted or denied by the party against whom they are made. The Court shall record such admissions and denials.

Ascertainment whether allegations in pleadings are admitted or denied.

O. 10, R. 1, Notes 1—2.

1. "Shall ascertain".—The powers which this order vests in the Civil Courts are mainly intended to draw by viva voce examination, the real points in controversy between the parties and thus prevent the real matter in dispute remaining undecided or left out of consideration.[1] The proper way of clearing up the pleadings after the plaint and the written statement are filed is, that provided by this rule, the provisions of which are peremptory.[2] Permitting parties to file a series of written statements against each other is not justified under this rule.[3] An examination under this rule is not necessary or proper where the pleadings on the record are complete and clear.[4]

2. Effect of statements by party or his pleader.—The party or his pleader is bound to answer questions put by the Court; but he can properly refuse to make admissions about matters not directly involved in the suit especially when the questions were put at the suggestion of the opposite party whose object was to get useful answers for a contemplated litigation.[1]

The admission of a party is conclusive against him[2] but is not evidence against the opposite party.[3]

The Court must record the admissions or denials made under this rule[4] but cannot act upon the answers recorded and pass final judgment in the suit without framing issues in the case.[5]

O. 10, R. 2.

R. 2. [S. 118.] At the first hearing of the suit, or at any subsequent hearing, any party appearing in person or present in Court, or any person able to answer any material questions relating to the suit by whom such party or his pleader is accompanied, may be examined orally by the Court; and the Court may, if it thinks fit, put in the course of such examination questions suggested by either party.

Non-filing of a written statement—Immaterial. See Note 1, Pt. (5).
Object of the rule. See Note 1, Pts. (1) to (3-a).

1. Oral examination.—The object of the examination under this rule is to ascertain the matters in dispute and not to take evidence or to ascertain what is to be the evidence in the case.[1] It is not intended to be a substitute for a regular examination on oath[2] but is intended to help the elucidation of what is obscure and vague in the plaint; the allegations of facts contained in the oral examination under this rule cannot be read into the plaint and thus enlarge its scope.[3] "The power under this rule is intended to be used by the judge only where he finds it necessary to obtain from a party, information, on any material questions relating to the suit and ought not to be employed so as to supersede the ordinary procedure at trial as prescribed in O. 18."[3-a] A statement made by a party under this rule is binding on him to the same extent as the statement made by a pleader would be binding on him. But a statement made by a person who accompanies the pleader to look after the case on behalf of the party would not necessarily bind the party on whose behalf he appears.[4]

Where a defendant appears by a pleader the fact that he does not file a written statement does not warrant the trial of the suit ex parte. The judge should proceed under this rule and ascertain what are the matters in dispute and then proceed with the suit.[5]

See also the undermentioned cases under the old Code of 1859.[6]

2. Order for personal appearance.—An order under this rule directing a party to appear in person can be passed only where the Court finds that there is a material question relating to the suit that has to be answered by such party or his pleader, and the pleader refuses or is unable to answer such question.[1]

The order should be specific and sufficiently explicit[2] and must state the reasons therefor. A mere statement that "it is necessary that the defendant should appear in person'' is not sufficient.[3] The Court has, however, a discretion to decide which of the parties ought to answer the question.[4]

3. Refusal or inability of pleader to answer.—See Note 2 above and Note 4 below.

4. Effect of non-attendance without lawful excuse.—Where the party directed to appear by the Court under this rule fails to appear in person without lawful excuse, the Court may pronounce judgment against him.[1] Where one party has failed to appear without lawful excuse but others have appeared, the Court cannot pronounce judgment against the persons who have so appeared.[2] It has been held by the High Court of Madras that this rule is a self-contained one applicable to all cases where a party has been ordered to attend for his examination under this rule and that where a judgment is pronounced against a party for failure to attend as directed, the order must be taken to have been made only under this rule, and not under the provisions of O. 9, even though the Court purported to pass the order under those provisions.[3] On the other hand the High Court of Allahabad has held that where the party directed to appear, and his pleader are both absent on the day appointed, the Court dismissing the suit must be taken to have acted only under the provisions of O. 9, even though it purported to act under this rule.[4] The reason given is that where the party and his pleader are both absent it could not be said that the party failed to attend without lawful excuse, and unless it could be said so, the Court cannot act under this rule.[4-a]

A person exempted under the Code from appearance in Court has a lawful excuse for not appearing in Court as directed.[5]

The Court is not bound to pass a decree against the defaulting party but may pass any order in relation to the suit as it deems fit.[6]

In a suit for rent defendant pleaded discharge but was prepared to withdraw the plea if the plaintiff would himself depose that there was no discharge. The Court ordered her appearance under this rule. It was held that the proper procedure would have been to take the defendant's evidence of the discharge and decide on the merits and that the Court had no reason to summon the plaintiff under this rule.[7]

5. Effect of dismissal under this rule.—A dismissal of a suit under this rule operates as res judicata in the subsequent suit on the same subject-matter.[1] A dismissal of a suit for redemption under this rule does not, however, according to the High Court of Bombay, bar a subsequent suit for redemption of the same mortgage inasmuch as the relationship of the mortgagor and the mortgagee continues and is not extinguished by the fact of the dismissal of the suit.[2] As to whether and when a decision in a suit for redemption bars a subsequent suit for redemption generally, see S. 11, Note 40.

6. Appeal.—Under the old Code there was a conflict of view with regard to the appealability of the order under para. 1 of S. 120 of old Code which corresponded to sub-Rule (1) of this rule.[1]

Under the present Code an appeal lies from an order pronouncing judgment under sub-Rule (2) of this rule (vide O. 43, R. 1, cl. (a).

But an order striking off the defence of one of the defendants for his failure to appear in person when ultimately the Court passed a final order decreeing the suit against all the defendants is not open to appeal.[2]

1. Discovery and inspection—General—After the issues have been framed and the suit is posted for trial, each party naturally begins to ask himself how he shall prove his case. For the purpose of maintaining his own case or for destroying the case of the adversary he may require information from the latter as to facts, or as to documents in the possession or power of such adversary, relevant to the issue. Where information is wanted as to facts, the party is allowed to administer to his adversary a string of questions to be answered by him. The questions are called "interrogatories". The Judge goes through the proposed questions first to see if they are proper at that stage of the proceedings and if they are, compels the other party to answer them on oath before trial. This is called discovery of facts by the adversary. If the party wants information from his adversary as to documents material to the issues, he may apply for an order compelling the other party to make a list of all documents which are in his possession or power, and, in certain circumstances, to permit him to inspect and take copies of these documents before the trial. This disclosure is known as discovery of documents. Discovery of facts and documents often tends to save expense and shorten litigation.

2. Scope of the rule as to interrogatories.—The main object of interrogatories is to save expense by enabling a party to obtain from his opponent information as to facts material to the questions in dispute between them, and to obtain admissions of any facts which he has to prove on any issue which is raised between them.[1] As a general rule, interrogatories will be allowed whenever the answers to them will serve either to maintain the case of the party administering them or to destroy the case of the adversary.[2] An admission of the adversary will serve to maintain the case of the party administering the interrogatory, or the answer might be destructive of his own case. But can an interrogatory be allowed which merely is intended to ascertain the nature of the opponent's case for the purpose of meeting such case beforehand? In the undermentioned cases under the old Code[3] it was held that it cannot. The reason given was that, where the pleadings were vague and case of the parties not clear, there were other provisions of the Code such as O. 8, R. 7 and O. 14, Rr. 1 and 2 under which the Court could clear up the position and that it was not therefore permissible for the opposite party to obtain such information by discovery. Under the present Code, however, it has been held that in view of the fact that the present order is now the same as O. 31 of the rules of the Supreme Court, interrogatories can be administered in the same manner as is done in England, even for discovering the nature of the opponent's case.[4]

3. Interrogatories and pleadings.—From what has been said before it is clear that interrogatories as to the truth or untruth of statements of facts made in the pleadings are admissible.[1] A party is entitled to interrogate his opponent with a view to ascertain what case he has to meet and the facts relied on, and to limit the generality of the pleadings and find out what is really in issue.[2] But the interrogatories are not like pleadings, confined to the material facts on which the parties intend to rely. Either party may interrogate as to any link in the chain of evidence necessary to support his own case, inasmuch as the question is relevant as leading up to a matter in question in the suit.[3] Thus if a defendant denies that he wrote a material document he may be asked if other documents produced to him are not in his handwriting though such documents have nothing to do with the suit but will be used for comparison of handwriting.[4] Similarly a defendant is entitled to ask the plaintiff in a suit on a Hundi which the defendant denies, to state in what form the consideration for the Hundi was paid, the particulars of the place where the defendants drew or accepted the Hundi and where and by whom the Hundi was presented for payment.[5]

4. Interrogatories and cross-examination.—Interrogatories can be allowed only where they relate to any matters in question in the suit... In interrogatories, therefore, which are really in the nature of cross-examination, such as questions put only to test the credibility of the party interrogated will not be allowed.[1]

5. Interrogatories must be as to relevant facts.—Interrogatories must be confined to facts which are relevant to the matters in question in the suit.

O. 11, R. 1, Notes 5—7.

They are not confined to facts directly in issue.[1] Where however the issue was on what terms the defendant and A had purchased certain properties, interrogatories as to the terms on which they had purchased other properties are irrelevant and will not be allowed.[2] Similarly in a suit seeking to charge defendants as agents, where the existence of the agency is the real issue, interrogatories as to private transactions are irrelevant.[3]

6. Interrogatories as to evidence or witnesses.—"The purpose of interrogatories is not to enable a litigant to come into Court knowing how his opponent is going to prove his case: He is not entitled to ask what his opponent's evidence is going to be".[1] Interrogatories therefore, as to the evidence which a party intends to adduce in support of his case, or the contents of his brief or as to the names of his witnesses are not permissible.[2] Thus, where in a suit for damages, the defendant wanted the plaintiff to "state how your estimate of damages to the amount of Rs. 13,000 mentioned in the 8th paragraph of the plaint is arrived at" it was held that the plaintiff was not bound to answer it.[2-a] Similarly, questions as to the names of the persons in whose presence this or that event took place will not be allowed.[3] The reason is that the allowing of such questions would enable the other party to tamper with the witnesses or to manufacture evidence in contradiction and so shape the case as to defeat justice.[4]

7. Names of persons.—As has been seen in the previous note questions as to the names of the persons in whose presence an event has taken place will not generally be allowed but where the name and address of a person is a material fact it must be disclosed, although the party may thereby have to disclose the names of his witnesses.[1] Thus in actions for the infringement of trade-marks or patents, the defendant is entitled to discovery of the names of "diverse persons" alleged in the plaint to have been induced to purchase the defendant's goods as the plaintiff's".[2] But in an action for damages arising from the bite of a dog, the Court refused to allow interrogatories to be put to the plaintiff as to persons alleged to have been previously bitten.[3]

Interrogatories with a view to ascertain whether some person other than the defendant is liable, will not be allowed.[4]

8. Interrogatories on questions of law.—Interrogatories must be as to questions of fact and must not ask for conclusions of law, inferences of facts, or construction of documents.[1] A question relating to foreign law will not be allowed unless the party ordered to answer is an expert in that law.[2]

9. Time for the delivery of interrogatories.—Interrogatories, will not as a general rule, be allowed until after the defence is filed as, until then, it is not known what are the matters in dispute.[1] In the Chancery Division of the High Court of England a plaintiff was formerly often allowed to deliver interrogatories with his statement of claim.[2] This is, however, not the practice now.

10. Against whom interrogatories may be allowed.—The general rule is the right to deliver and the liability to answer interrogatories are confined to the parties to the suit.[1] But a person who is not actually a party, if in substance, a party, may be asked to answer interrogatories.[2] Thus in a suit by an agent, an order may be obtained against the principal who is the real plaintiff provided the agent has no individual interest of his own in the suit.[3] A stranger to the suit, however, cannot be compelled to answer an interrogatory.[4] Thus no interrogatories can be administered to a witness.[5] As to the procedure where a party is a corporation, see R. 5, infra.

11. Opposite parties—A minor or lunatic.—The words "Opposite Parties" mean parties between whom there is some right to be adjusted in the action or proceeding.[1] Thus a defendant may deliver interrogatories to another co-defendant if there is some question or issue between them.[2]

Similarly where A and B are co-defendants in a suit but B colludes with the plaintiff, he may be regarded as a "party opposite" to A and the latter can, therefore, deliver interrogatories to B.[3] But B cannot in such a case be regarded as a party opposite to the plaintiff though he is a defendant; the plaintiff cannot, therefore, deliver interrogatories to B.[4] No interrogatories can be served on an ex parte defendant.[5] O. 11, R. 1, Notes 11—14.

Where a party to a suit is a minor or lunatic, interrogatories may be served on his next friend or guardian ad litem as the case may be. See R. 23 below.

12. Leave of Court.—This rule contemplates: 1. Leave to interrogate, and 2. The service of the interrogatories through the Court. It is the duty of the Court to determine whether the applicant should be allowed to interrogate the other side, but not to determine at that stage what questions the party interrogated should be compelled to answer. An application for leave should be made like other applications, and the order should be "that the applicant be at liberty to interrogate".[1] An order granting leave to deliver interrogatories is not an order to answer interrogatories, that is, an order requiring the other party to answer them; that party may have good grounds for refusing to answer them or some of them.[2] He has a right to come into Court and ask that the order be re-considered, and, if found to have been wrong, set aside. If the interrogatories are scandalous, or in any way an abuse of the process of the Court, the Court may interfere at any stage. In other cases, the party might omit to answer the interrogatories to which he objects at his perill, or he may file his affidavit in answer, stating in it his objections to answer such questions as he objects to; and in this case an interrogating party, if dissatisfied, can apply under R. 11, infra.[3]

13. Impleading party for discovery.—A person should not be made a party to an action merely for the purpose of getting discovery, however important, the discovery might prove to be.[1]

14. Probate proceedings.—This order applies to probate proceedings by virtue of S. 266 of the Succession Act, XXXIX of 1925. The Judge can direct an executor on delivery of interrogatories to make a full discovery of the assets of the deceased. Strictest relevancy may not be required and the Judge has got power to exclude anything which is offensive or improper.[1]

1. "As the Court shall consider necessary".—The Court under this rule has no power to settle the interrogatories but to state merely what interrogatories should be administered.[1]

The practice in England is that it is obligatory to draw up the proposed interrogatories and to deliver a copy of them to the opposite party with notice. It is necessary also to give a copy for the master to consider and initial. The Judge or the master has a discretion to allow or refuse leave to interrogate,[2] and the master's discretion will not be interfered with unless he acts on a wrong principle.[3] He will also consider any offer to deliver particulars or to make admissions or produce documents that may be made. If he decides to allow interrogatories at all, the master will consider the particular interrogatories sought to be delivered and will hear arguments on both sides for and against allowing any particular question. In running down cases, interrogatories relating to the details of the accident are not ordinarily necessary and will not be allowed except under special circumstances for the purpose of disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs.[4] The opposite party need not be served personally;[5] it is sufficient if his solicitor is served.[6] O. 11, R. 2, Note 1.

The grant of leave to one party to deliver interrogatories to another does not, as has been seen in Note 12 to R. 1, ante, amount to an order requiring the other party to answer them. It is not a decision which has to be obeyed. The party may have good grounds of objections under R. 6.[7]

An order disallowing interrogatories is not a decree and is not open to appeal. Nor is it revisable inasmuch as the party adversely affected has a remedy by way of appeal from the final decision of the Court.[8]

R. 3. [S. 123.] In adjusting the costs of the suit inquiry shall at the instance of any party be made into the propriety of exhibiting such interrogatories, and if it is the opinion of the taxing officer or of the Court, either with or without an application for inquiry, that such interrogatories have been exhibited unreasonably, vexatiously, or at improper length, the costs occasioned by the said interrogatories and the answers thereto shall be paid in any event by the party in fault. 1. Costs.—Ordinarily the costs of an application will be dealt with on the application and be costs in the suit. This rule makes a special provision for ordering the party at fault to pay costs in any event irrespective of the result of the suit. See S. 35.

The Court has power to order under the corresponding English rule that costs of a viva voce examination under R. 11 be paid by the party examined in any event,[1] but the costs of an oppressive vive voce examination may be ordered to be paid by the party delivering the interrogatory.[2]

1. Corporations and companies.—The Secretary of a Corporation or Company, is, as a rule, the person to be interrogated.[1] But the Court may issue delivery of interrogatories to be answered by any other officer of the company.[2] Before issuing such an order, however, the Judge must be satisfied that the officer selected by the party has a competent knowledge of the facts and the means of answering the questions.[3] The officer interrogated is bound to answer only with reference to knowledge acquired in the course of his employment and on inquiries of other officers who have acquired their knowledge in the same way.[4] There is no obligation on the part of the officer either to disclose his knowledge or to obtain or disclose the knowledge of other agents or servants of the company acquired by him or them otherwise than in the course of his or their employment.[5]

The answer of the officer is the answer of the company and can be read as admissions which binds the company.[6]

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule enables the party interrogated to file his objections, and indicate the grounds of objection which he might take.[1] The party taking such objection is entitled to have it adjudicated upon by the Court and a clear and specific order passed directing him to answer such of the interrogatories as the Court holds to be relevant. The mere fact that he could apply, under R. 7, to have the interrogatories, set aside or struck out does not take away his right to have his objection adjudicated upon.[2]

2. Scandalous interrogatories.—Questions irrelevant to the matters in issue and taken for the purpose of abusing, insulting or degrading the opposite party are scandalous interrogatories and are not permissible. But nothing can be scandalous which is relevant[1] even though tending to criminate the person interrogated.[2]

3. Irrelevant interrogatories.—As a general rule, the question taken must be relevant to the matter in issue[1] though it need not be confined to the facts in issue.[2] Thus interrogatories asking plaintiff whether similar charges as that made in the suit, had not been made against him previously in a newspaper, and, whether he had contradicted them or taken any notice of them on that occasion, are clearly irrelevant.[3] Similarly in a suit by A for a declaration that he and the defendant purchased a certain land as co-partners, interrogatories relating to the arrangements under which other purchases had been made by them together are irrelevant.[4] In no case will interrogatories be allowed if the defence at which they aim would be no defence in law to the suit.[5]

4. Not exhibited bona fide.—Where the questions, though relevant are not put bona fide for the purposes of the present action but for other and ulterior objects, e.g., in view of a future litigation, they will be disallowed by the Court.[1]

5. "Not sufficiently material at that stage".—The word "material" means more than relevant. A fact may be relevant but not material at a particular stage.[1] The question of materiality must be tested by reference to the case made by the pleadings and to what will be in issue at the hearing. Generally "the Court is unwilling before the right to relief is established to make an order for discovery which may be injurious to the defendant and will only be useful to the plaintiff if he succeeds in establishing his title to relief."[2] Compare R. 20, which makes a provision for the postponement of discovery till after determination of issue or question. Nevertheless the Court has a discretion to order discovery at once on other grounds.[3]

6. "Any other ground".—These words mean grounds ejusdem generis with those specified.[1] They will include the following grounds:—

(a) that the questions are criminatory;

(b) that they relate to privileged communications between the party and his legal advisers;

(c) that they relate to a party's evidence; and

(d) that they are injurious to public interests.

In general, questions excluded by Ss. 121-129 of the Evidence Act and which could not be asked if the party were in the witness-box cannot also be taken as interrogatories.[2] Questions relating to communications made for the purpose of litigation between third persons and the legal adviser of a party or between third persons and the party for the purpose of submission to the adviser,[3] or questions offending against a rule of public policy may also be objected to.[4] But even if no objection is taken by the party it is the duty of the Court to consider whether a rule of public policy does not prevent the disclosure of the documents or of the information sought.[5] O. 11, R.6, Notes 6—9.

7. Fishing interrogatories.—The questions asked must not be "fishing" that is to say they must refer to some definite and existing state of circumstances and must not be put merely in the hope of discovering some flaw in the opponent's case[1] or with the object of filling up blanks in the interrogators' own pleadings.[2] Thus where the plaintiff was charged with having used certain blasphemous words, interrogatories tending to show that, if he did not use those words on the particular occasion, still he had on other occasions said something very much like it, are merely "fishing" interrogatories and will be disallowed.[3]

8. Wagering contracts.—In cases where the defence of wager is set up, the Court will refuse to allow the party setting up this defence to interrogate his opponent generally as to his business transactions apart from the particular transactions in the suit; the reason is that it will be "manifestly unfair to compel a man to disclose his general dealings on the chance that thereby his opponent may discover something that will support his case".[1]

9. Defamation.—Where, in a plaint in an action for slander, publication to one named-person and also to various other persons unnamed is alleged, it is not permissible to ask the defendant whether he spoke the words complained of to any person or persons other than the person named and the names of other persons if any. Such an interrogatory is a fishing interrogatory the object of which is to find out some cause of action or defence other than that specifically alleged.[1] So also the defendant in a libel case will not, as a rule, be allowed before he has given particulars to interrogate or get discovery for the purpose of finding out whether he has a defence or not.[2]

R. 7. [New.] Any interrogatories may be set aside on the ground that they have been exhibited unreasonably or vexatiously, or struck out on the ground that they are prolix, oppressive, unnecessary or scandalous; and any application for this purpose may be made within seven days after service of the interrogatories. O. 11, R.7.

1. Setting aside or striking out interrogatories.—Interrogatories must not be oppressive or exceed the legitimate requirements of the particular occasion.[1] Thus interrogatories as to profits requiring a search through business books of several years when it is absolutely irrelevant in a suit for a declaration[2] or as to an innuendo and the names of all the persons to whom the libel had been published in a libel action[3] or as to a secret manufacturing process, have all been held to be vexatious and oppressive.[4] The mere irrelevancy of the interrogatory is no ground for setting aside the interrogatory under this rule. The party has to proceed under R. 6.

R. 8. [S. 126.] Interrogatories shall be answered by affidavit to be filed within ten days, or within such other time as the Court may allow.

Synopsis.

1. Matters within the knowledge of party's agent or servant.

1 Matters within the knowledge of party's agent or servant.—The party interrogated cannot escape giving an answer by saying that he has no personal knowledge as to matters inquired into.[1] He is bound to obtain the information from his agents or servants, if such knowledge has been acquired by them in the ordinary course of their employment. He can, however, show that it would be unreasonable to require him to do so in any particular case, as for instance where either his agents or servants have left his employment or where it would occasion unreasonable expense or an unreasonable amount of delay or the like to get such information.[2] A party's banker or solicitor is his agent within the meaning of this rule.[3] As has been seen in gatories delivered to him.[1] In the absence of such an order under this rule, no action can be taken against the defaulting party under R. 21.[2]

The application for further answer to interrogatories ought to specify the interrogatories or parts of interrogatories to which further answers are required.[3] When the answers to all interrogatories are properly objected to a further answer in respect of all of them can be asked for.[4]

2. "Answers insufficiently".—The general rule is that the person answering must answer sufficiently. Sufficiency and not the truth of the answer is the point to be considered at this stage.[1] The answer must be confined to answering the question put. Any necessary or reasonable explanation or qualification without which the answer would be unfair or incomplete or misleading may be added.[2] Thus, if a party is asked whether he did not make a particular affidavit, he may answer that he did, but that he has since found out that it was inaccurate.[3] But an addition of an irrelevant or otherwise objectionable matter may make the answer embarrassing and prevent the party who asks for it from using it without having thrust upon him irrelevant matters as part of it; the answer in such a case will be considered insufficient and a further answer will be ordered.[4]

3. Further answer may be declined on the ground of privilege.—The privilege must be one which can be properly claimed in law; the Court will not require a further answer to be put in unless it is clearly satisfied either from the nature of the subject-matter for which privilege is claimed or from statements in the answer itself or in documents so referred to as to become part of the answer, that the claim for privilege cannot possibly be substantiated. The mere existence of reasonable suspicion which is sufficient to justify the Court in requiring a further affidavit of documents is not enough in the case of a claim for privilege.[1]

4. Viva voce examination.—An order may be made requiring the party to further answer the interrogatories by viva voce examination. This procedure is, however, adopted only in exceptional cases.[1] A roving examination should not be allowed in such viva voce examination.[2]

1. Scope of the rules.—These rules deal with the second branch of discovery, viz., the discovery of documents. They enable a party to apply to the Court for the purpose of compelling his opponent to disclose the documents he has in his possession or power.[1] and the object of this procedure is two-fold, (1) to secure as far as possible that all material documents are disclosed by putting the opposite party on oath as to the documents in his possession or power with the consequent penalties attaching to a false oath, and (2) to put an end to what might otherwise lead to a protracted inquiry as to the material documents actually in the possession or under the control of the opposite party.[2]

The right to have the existence of a document disclosed in the affidavit of documents under these rules does not necessarily involve any right to have it produced for inspection; nor is a protection from production for inspection a sufficient reason for not disclosing its existence. The rule does not alter the principles relating to the production of documents but gives the Court a discretion to refuse the discovery of documents when there is no reasonable prospect of its being of any use[3] or to limit the nature and extent of the discovery.[4]

These rules do not preclude an application under R. 18, sub-R. 2.[5]

2. Application for discovery of documents may be made without affidavit.—An application under Rule 12, need not be supported by an affidavit as is generally required in the case of other applications.[1] The Court has power either to refuse or adjourn the application and, in exercising its discretion, it is guided by the pleadings and the nature of the action. The party who applies must, where there is contest, show that he has a good cause of action and that the documents are relevant to the case.[2]

3. Grounds of objection to discover documents.—A party against whom an order for discovery of documents has been made by the Court cannot object to specify the existence of the documents.[1] He is also, as a general rule, bound to produce every document in his possession or power which is material or relevant to the suit, unless it is covered by some established privilege.[2] The fact that a document was written on a privileged occasion, in the special sense in which that term is used in actions of defamation, is no reason for refusing to produce it; it is not, on that ground, privileged from inspection.[3] But there are several classes of documents which have been recognised as being privileged from production. These may be dealt with in the following order.—

(1) Documents protected by professional or legal privilege.

(2) Documents relating solely to the case of the party giving discovery.

(3) Documents not in the sole possession of the party giving discovery.

(4) Documents in the possession of a party only as agent or on behalf of another.

(5) Documents tending to criminate or expose to forfeiture.

(6) Documents protected on the ground of the public policy.

4. Professional or legal privilege.—A communication between parties and their legal advisers has always been protected from disclosure even at the risk of the possibility of truth being concealed thereby.[1] The object of the rule is to enable persons to obtain legal advice safely and effectually.[2] A party is thus not bound to produce any confidential communication between him and his legal advisers.[3] It is necessary, however, to distinguish between documents and communications that are privileged irrespective of whether litigation was contemplated or was pending and those that are privileged only where litigation was contemplated or was pending at the time when they came into existence. The first class of cases will cover the following documents:—

(1) Letters and communications passing between a party, or his predecessors-in-title, and his, or their, legal advisers provided they are confidential and written to, or by the solicitor or legal adviser in his professional capacity for the purpose of getting legal advice or assistance.[4] If the communications are not made

(4) Instructions and briefs to counsel and counsel's briefs and notes.[9]

The second class of documents will cover the following:—

(1) Communications between a solicitor and a non-professional agent or a third party, directly or through an agent and made with a view to pending or contemplated litigation and for the purpose of getting or giving advice or for obtaining or collecting evidence.[10]

(2) Communications between the client and a non-professional agent or third party, which are made in answer to inquiries made by the party as the agent for or at the request or suggestion of his solicitor, or without any such request, but for the purpose of being laid before the legal adviser for the purpose of advice in respect of a pending or contemplated litigation.[11] But a mere communication between a principal and agent, though confidential is not privileged[11-a] even after litigation has commenced and legal advice has been taken as to its course.[12] Similarly the reports made by a servant to his master are not privileged though they may relate to the subject-matter of the suit.[13]

(3) Communications between co-plaintiffs or co-defendants.[14] Where one of the trustees of a will is a solicitor and acts as a solicitor for the trustees, communications between him and his co-trustees, which would be privileged if he were not a co-trustee, are privileged.[15]

No privilege attaches to communications between a client and his legal adviser made in furtherance of a fraudulent or illegal purpose which is definitely alleged in the pleadings or in the affidavits.[16] The privilege is confined to legal advice and does not extend to communications between a party and his medical[17] or spiritual[18] adviser or non-professional friend or adviser.[19]

See sections 126 to 129 of the Evidence Act.

5. Documents relating solely to the case of the party giving discovery. —A party will not be compelled to produce for inspection documents which he swears relate to his own case, and do not relate to or tend to support the case of his opponent, and do not impeach his own case.[1] Thus he need not produce any document which he can swear, relate solely to his own title to any real property and to contain nothing which tends to establish the title of his opponent.[2]

Documents disclosing party's evidence.—A party cannot be compelled to produce documents which form the exclusive evidence of his own case or title.[3] But they must not, in any way, tend to prove or support the adversary's title;[4] if they are necessary to support the adversary's case[5] or may be evidence for the adversary as well,[6] their production cannot be refused. In order to claim this privilege the party may state in his affidavit that the document constitutes evidence of his own case or title, that they contain nothing supporting or tending to support the adversary's case or title and that they contain nothing impeaching his own case or title.[7] But a party is not confined to the affidavit in which the claim is first set up; he is entitled to put in and use a further affidavit in support of his claim of privilege.[8]

Opinions upon, or steps taken in reference to, a suit in which the plaintiff and defendant are putting forward opposing contentions cannot be said to relate solely to the case of the plaintiffs.[9]

O. 11, Rr. 12&13, Notes 6—9.

6. Document not in the sole possession of the party.—The rule of the Court of Chancery in England is thus laid down by Lord Cottenham in Taylor v. Rundell.[1] "If a defendant has a joint possession of a document with somebody else who is not before the Court, the Court will not order him to produce it and this, for two reasons, the one is that a party will not be ordered to do that which he cannot or may not be able to do, the other is that another party not present has an interest in the document which the Court cannot deal with". Thus it was held that a partner or his agent cannot be asked to produce documents belonging to partnership where the other partners are not before the Court.[2] But in a similar case in the High Court of Bombay,[3] Sir Charles Sargent, C. J., held that the case before him did not fall within either of the reasons mentioned above, that the defendants (partners), physically speaking, could produce the document and that legally speaking they represented the other partners for the purpose of production of documents as there was no other person having an interest distinct from their own interest.

For the purpose of the disclosure of the existence of documents, "possession" includes possession by an agent of the party giving the discovery.[4]

7. Documents held in possession as agent of third party.—No party can be compelled to produce documents of which he is not the owner but of which he has the custody as the agent of a third party who is not a party to the action as where the documents are in the possession of a party as a trustee or as a mortgagee regarding title-deeds of mortgagor, etc.[1]

8. Documents incriminating party.—It is a good ground of privilege that the document, if produced, would tend to criminate the party producing them. But this objection does not apply to the discovery of the documents.[1]

See, however, S. 132 of the Evidence Act.

9. Where production of public official document is injurious to public interests.—Public official documents need not be produced when an objection is taken in the affidavit of documents by the head of the department or by some responsible officer;[1] the mere fact that the documents are official or confidential is not enough to protect them; in case of doubt the Judge may, in his discretion, adjourn the question to the trial.[2] But, as a general rule, if the objection is taken by the proper person, the Court will not go behind it, the foundation of the rule being that the information cannot be disclosed without injury to the public interest. See also the Indian Evidence Act, Ss. 123

10. Court may inspect a privileged document.—Where privilege is claimed by a party, the Court may inspect the document to decide whether the privilege claimed is proper and valid.[1] See R. 19, sub-R. (2).

11. Contents of affidavit of documents.—A party who is ordered under R. 12 to make discovery on oath should set forth in his affidavit all documents which are or have been in his possession or power relating to the matter in question.[1] A document may be described as a writing or printing capable of being read, no matter what the material is upon which it is impressed or inscribed.[2] The expression "matter in question" means a question or issue in dispute in the action, and not the thing about which question or issue arises; thus in an action to recover possession of land it means the plaintiff's alleged title and not the land.[3] Every document which will throw any light on the case is a document relating to a matter in dispute in the suit.[4] It is not confined to such as would be admissible in evidence[5] but includes all documents containing information which may either directly or indirectly enable the party seeking discovery, either to advance his own case or damage that of his adversary, or which may fairly lead him to a train of inquiry which may have either of these two consequences.[6] Every such document must be included in the affidavit of documents even if the party is in possession thereof jointly with others or even if he has therein no property at all, provided they are in his corporeal possession. As regards documents which are not, but have been in the party's possession, he must state what has become of them. It is always desirable to adopt the form given in the Code as otherwise an affidavit may be regarded as insufficient.[7] When the affidavit is insufficient, a summons may be taken to consider its sufficiency.[8]

Where there are several plaintiffs all of them must ordinarily join in the affidavit.[9] It is possible on a proper case being made out that the order may be limited to a particular party.[10] In the case of a purdanashin lady it is doubtful if a verification is necessary.[11] It is the duty of an attorney to be very careful in ascertaining from his client who has to make an affidavit of documents exactly what materials and documents are in his possession. It is further his duty the moment he finds that there are other documents which have not been disclosed, at the very earliest moment, to bring those documents to the notice of his opponent and give him an opportunity of inspecting them.[12]

12. Sufficient description of documents.—It is necessary that there should be a sufficient description of documents in the schedule annexed to the affidavit of documents. It is sufficient, however, if the documents are described in such a manner as to enable enforcement of production, if ordered.[1] Where a party claims to withhold documents or letters on the ground of privilege, a less degree of particularity will suffice; it is not necessary to give such description as will enable the opponent to know its contents.[2]

If the documents are not numerous the most advisable course is to set out each of them separately and number them in the margin of the schedule. But if there are numerous documents of the same class or description, it is not necessary to number each of them separately; it will be proper to tie them up in bundles, and number the documents or otherwise ear-mark them in such a way that the other party may ask for those which he wants to inspect.[3]

13. Against whom order for discovery may be made.—As a general rule discovery is confined to the parties only[1] and does not apply to third parties.[2] The words "any party" and "any other party" in R. 12 contemplate opposite parties within the meaning of R. 1.[3] See Note 11 to R. 1, and Notes 14 to 21 below.

14. Any party.—In a suit brought by a nominal plaintiff, the persons really interested may be ordered to give discovery and the suit may be stayed unless they give such discovery.[1] So also where a principal residing abroad is the real plaintiff, but is suing through his agent, the defendant is entitled to have the action stayed until such discovery is made as the real plaintiff would have been obliged to make, had he been the plaintiff on the record.[2]

15. Benamidar.—Where a person uses the name of another as a nominal plaintiff only for the purpose of bringing an action in which he alone is really interested, the real plaintiff may be called on to give discovery.[1] But the nominal plaintiff also will be liable to make an affidavit of documents.[2]

16. Corporation.—The Court has power to order an officer of a company or corporation to give discovery.[1] A public body cannot burke discovery on the ground that there are a large number of papers, the production of which would flood the Court.[2]

17. Crown.—The Crown has a right of discovery as against a subject but cannot be compelled to give discovery[1] though as a matter of practice it does give discovery by way of a list of documents in the same way as a subject would be bound to give, unless some principle of public interest is involved.[2]

18. Foreign Prince or State.—A foreign Sovereign or State is also bound to give discovery like any other suitor[1] and the suit will be stayed until a proper person is named to give it.[2]

21. Advocate-General.—The Advocate-General cannot be called upon to make discovery on oath in a suit filed by him at the instance of relators under S. 92, Civil Procedure Code. But an affidavit of documents may be required from the latter.[1]

22. Official Liquidator.—As an Officer of the Court, the Official Liquidator must not ordinarily be compelled to make an affidavit of documents in his possession. The proper course is to apply to him for inspection in the first instance, and on his refusal, to apply to the Court.[1] The same rule would seem to apply to the Official Receiver and Assignees under the Insolvency Acts.

23. Marine Insurance.—In actions on policies of Marine Insurance, the defendant underwriters are entitled to apply for and obtain, as a matter of course, an order for the production of all material documents and papers relating to the insurance, not only from the plaintiff and all persons interested in the proceedings but all other persons who are in possession of such documents or papers.[1] This does not, of course, include the underwriters themselves; but in an action at the suit of a mortgagee it includes a mortgagor who has sailed the ship as the managing owner.[2] The practice extends to all actions on policies which are substantially marine policies whether on a ship or cargo.[8]

24. Affidavit of documents if conclusive—Further affidavit.—The affidavit of documents filed by a party against whom an order for discovery has been passed, is conclusive, and, must be accepted by the party seeking discovery as true, both with regard to the documents that are, or has been in the possession or power of the party making discovery,[1] and as to their relevancy unless there is something like an answer in cross-examination or some other documentary evidence showing conclusively that there are other documents.[2] They are also conclusive as to the grounds stated in support of a claim for privilege from production.[3] The party seeking discovery cannot, for the purpose of obtaining a further affidavit or inspection of documents for which privilege is claimed, adduce evidence or otherwise show that the affidavit of documents is insufficient or untrue.[4] Nor, as a rule, can he interrogate with a view to show that the affidavit is untrue.[5] There are two cases, however, where the affidavit of the document can be controverted:—

(1) Where, from the affidavit itself, or from the document referred to therein, or from admissions made either in pleadings or otherwise, it appears that the party making discovery has or has had other relevant documents in his possession or power.[6]

(2) Where the basis on which the first affidavit has been made turns out to have been wrong; in other words, where the party making the affidavit has misconceived his case so that the Court is practically certain that if he had conceived properly and acted on a correct view of the law he would have disclosed further documents.[7]

In a suit for ejectment the Court will not as a rule go behind the affidavit and where, in such a suit either party claims to refuse production on the ground that the documents relates solely to his own title and do not in any way tend to prove or support the title of the opposite party, the Court cannot go behind the affidavit and enquire whether his statement is true or not.[8] But in a suit for the recovery of the price of materials supplied to the defendant in which the defence was that the materials were defective the Court ordered the production of the Engineer's report referred to in his pleadings, where his statement showed that the report was not of the character described by the defendant.[9]

25. Effect of non-disclosure of documents.—Where no application is made under this rule, a party is not bound to produce any document. He is entitled to refrain from producing any document which he considers irrelevant and no adverse presumption can be drawn against the party from its non-production[1] except where, from the nature and circumstances of the case it is the imperative duty on his part to produce them,[2] but where an order is made against a party for discovery and he alleges, as to some of the documents that they have been destroyed or may have perished, he is bound to give evidence of diligent search for them. In the absence of such evidence a presumption that, if produced, they will be unfavourable to that party will arise.[3]

26. Right to seal part of documents.—A party may seal up such portions of the documents produced by him as he swears are privileged. He must, however, specify what parts of the documents referred to he claims to seal up and the grounds upon which the claim is based.[1] The rule is the same with regard to portions of documents which do not relate to the matters in question.[2] The party making discovery has the option either to disclose such portions in his affidavit or to disclose the whole and state that such portion alone is relevant and to seal up the rest.[3] When the right of the party to seal up parts of the document is contested, the Court will appoint an officer to whom the party desiring inspection is to state in confidence why he wants to inspect any portion of the documents sealed, and the officer, after looking at the documents as to whether and in what way the part noted or desired to be noted is material to the case should make a report for the orders of the Court.[4] The Court can, also, order the sealed parts to be unfastened for its personal inspection.[5]

1. Scope of the rule.—An order for production of documents under this rule is quite different from an order for discovery under Rule 12 or an order for inspection under R. 18, infra,[1] or for an order for answering interrogatories under R. 11, ante.[2] A party must set out every document in his possession or power where an order of discovery has been passed against him; but he is not bound to produce them unless an order for production has been passed against him.[3] An order for production can only be made after an order for discovery has been made under R. 12.[4] The mere production of the documents does not give an immediate and indefeasible right of inspection to the other party.[5] Nor such document become ipso facto a piece of evidence in the case.[6]

Under this rule the Court acts of its own motion and not on the application of any party.[7] It cannot, however, delegate the exercise of the power

under this rule to a commissioner.[8] No order should be made against a party unless he has directly or indirectly admitted the document to be in his possession or power[9] and unless such documents are in existence.[10] The words "at any time during the pendency of the suit" shows that an order for production can be made even before the issues are framed.[11]

It was held in the undermentioned case[12] of the Bombay High Court that a Court has no discretion to refuse production unless the documents are privileged. But in a later case of the same High Court it has been held that the Court has a discretion in compelling production of documents even though they are privileged.[13] An order for production must be a written summons on the party for such production and not a mere verbal order.[14] It must not be a general order that all the documents in the defendants' possession should be produced[15] except where the general description is sufficient for the identification of the documents or books sought to be produced.[16]

Where the documents are produced in obedience to the order of the Court, the Court can deal with them in such manner as appears to it to be just.[17]

The power to compel the production of documents has been extended to tribunals acting under various local Acts.[18]

2. "Possession or Power".—The words "possession or power" as a general rule mean exclusive possession.[1] They also mean legal possession,[2] i.e., a right and power to deal with the documents.[3] There is no power to compel a party to produce documents not in his control or possession, or documents, the possession of which he has parted with before the date of the application. A person who claims a lien upon a deed has generally the right to refuse production thereof.[4]

O.11, R.14. Notes 3—6.

3. "Relating to any matter in question in such suit."—The order under this rule is to be limited to such documents alone as relate to the matters in dispute and the Court must, before it makes the order, determine, for the purpose thereof, what are the matters in question in the suit.[1] Every document which will throw any light on the case comes within the meaning of these words.[2] In a suit for accounts, the Court cannot under this rule call upon the defendant to show, in detail, the income and expenditure of the estate in suit until the decision of the suit. In other words, a Judge cannot invoke the aid of this rule for the purpose of bringing into existence a document which may be useful for the case.[3]

4. Effect of Ss. 163 and 164 of the Indian Evidence Act.—These sections appear in the chapter dealing with the examination of witnesses at the trial of the suit. Under S. 163 when a party calls for a document which he has given the other party notice to produce, and such document is produced and inspected by the former party he is bound to give it as evidence if the latter party requires him to do so. Under S. 164, when a party refuses to produce a document which he has had notice to produce, he cannot afterwards use the document as evidence without the consent of the other party or the order of the Court. In the undermentioned case[1] the High Court of Madras raised, but did not decide, the question whether S. 163 was applicable to documents produced under the discovery procedure enacted in this rule or where it only applied to documents produced after the trial had begun.

5. Waiver of privilege.—A party may waive his privilege, and produce the documents for which he can claim exemption.[1] Such waiver may be either with reference to the whole document or to a portion thereof.[2] Where a party expressly refers to documents in the pleadings as the source of his own information and knowledge of facts relevant to the suit and then sets up these facts by way of answer to the plaintiff's claim, he cannot afterwards contend that the documents are confidential and intended merely for his legal advisers or for the purpose of evidence in the case,[3] but the fact that a portion of a privileged document is read to the plaintiff's solicitor by the defendant's solicitor does not amount to a waiver of the privilege as regards the parts not so read.[4]

6. Partner.—One partner of a firm represents the other partners for the purpose of production of documents[1] and a notice to one is notice to all

O.11, R.15, Note 1.

1. Scope of the rule.—Rules 15 to 18 deal with inspection of documents. Documents may, for the purposes of inspection, be divided into two classes:—

(1) Documents referred to in the pleadings or affidavits of the parties.

(2) Other documents in the possession or power of the party but not so referred to.

As regards the first class of documents a party may, without the intervention of the Court, give notice to the party in whose pleadings they are referred to, to produce such documents for his inspection (R. 15). The party to whom such notice is given should, within ten days from the receipt of such notice, give notice to the party claiming such inspection stating the time and place at which the documents may be inspected and stating his objections, if any, to the production of any of the documents (R. 17). If he fails to do so in the manner required by R. 17, the other party may apply to the Court for an order for such inspection [R. 18, sub-R. (1)], and the Court should grant such inspection unless the documents are privileged in law or relate exclusively to the case of the party producing them and contain nothing supporting or tending to support the opponent's case.[1]

As regards the second class of documents the party desiring the inspection can only proceed by way of an application to the Court along with an affidavit showing the relevancy of the documents.[1-a]

A Court has no jurisdiction to order inspection of documents except as provided in Rr. 15 to 18.[1-b] The privilege of inspection by a party of his adversary's documents is not a matter of routine but is to be permitted or refused only on judicial considerations and so as to result in as little harm as possible to the parties who are entitled to have the protection of the Court in carrying on their lawful pursuits.[2] The object of the rule is to give the opposite party the same advantage as if the documents had been fully set out in the pleadings.[3]

By refusing to produce a document in his pleadings, a party does not lose the privilege that he might have claimed in respect of the document. The only penalty for not producing such documents according to the notice, is that he cannot afterwards put them in evidence. Even in such a case, the Court may, if sufficient cause is shown by the defaulting party, allow the same to be put in evidence on such terms as to costs and otherwise as the Court shall think fit.[4] Where documents are objected to on the ground of immateriality the Court will, if necessary, order them to be produced for its own inspection in order to judge of their materiality.[5]

2. "At any time."—Where a document is referred to in the pleadings or affidavits of a party, the opposite party is entitled as of right to claim inspection thereof[1] even before the filing of the written statement.[2] But no inspection will, as a general rule, be ordered of documents other than those referred to in the pleadings or affidavits, till after written statement is filed.[3]

3. Documents referred to in the pleadings or affidavits.—Pleadings include particulars[1] and affidavits will include an affidavit of documents,[2] affidavit of answers to interrogatories[3] and exhibits forming part of the affidavit[4] as also an affidavit intended to be filed but not filed and of which a copy has been given to the other side.[5]

The documents need not have been identified or particularly described in such pleadings or affidavits; it is enough if they have been referred to generally.[6] But a party is not entitled to inspect the documents incidentally referred to in the pleadings of the opposite party if they are not material for the case of either party.[7] There is a difference of opinion as to whether a document referred to in the plaint in the list attached thereto under the provision of O. 7, R. 14, sub-R. (2), is one that can be said to be referred to in the pleadings. It has been held by the High Courts of Bombay[8] and Madras[9] following the English case of Quilter v. Heatley[10] that such a document is one referred to in the pleadings. The High Court of Calcutta[11] has held that the list annexed to the plaint is not part of the plaint itself and, consequently, documents referred to in such list cannot be said to be referred to in the pleadings.

Where entries in a book are referred to in the pleadings inspection will be limited to those entries.[12] The rule does not apply to copies of documents referred to though they may be in the possession of the party.[13] Where the plaintiff has made an affidavit of documents at the instance of one defendant and another defendant desires to inspect them he is entitled to do this subject to the right of the plaintiff to seal up such portions of the documents as do not relate to the matters in issue or to the case of the defendant applying.[14] Under the Original Side rules of the Madras High Court a defendant is entitled to be furnished with a copy of the document sued on and which is deposited with the plaint.[15]

4. Who can inspect under this rule.—The party, his authorised agent, and his pleader, can inspect the documents under this rule.[1] But a former employee of a party-in-charge of his books cannot be engaged by the opposite party for such purpose. The Court will not ordinarily allow such persons to inspect.[2] The term "agent" does not include a professional accountant appointed for the purpose[3] though, in proper cases, the Court will allow inspection by an accountant or other expert.[4] Inspection by a witness is not usually allowed.[5] The costs of inspection is to be paid by the party inspecting though under exceptional circumstances such costs may be made costs in the cause.[6]

5. Copies of documents produced, if can be taken.—The right to inspection includes a right to take copies of documents produced,[1] unless they relate exclusively to the case of the party producing them and contain nothing to support his adversary's case.[2] The right to take copies is confined to all relevant and unprivileged documents.[3] In a proper case, the Court will order photographs to be taken.[4]

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.

3. Banker's books.

"Documents" contemplated by the rule. See Note 1, Pt. (1).

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule only comes into operation after a notice under R. 15 has been given. It applies to all documents mentioned in R. 15.[1] In Dhapi v. Ram Pershad[2] it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the correct rule of procedure is that if a party does not desire to produce documents he should refrain from delivering the notice under the rule but wait to see if the plaintiff applies under R. 18. It has also been held that, when the notice was served at a time when the suit was stayed, the ten days' time begins, to run only from the date the suit is revived.

2. "Usual place of custody."—This rule clearly specified the place of inspection with regard to Banker's books and Business books. The words in the old Code "some other convenient place" gave room for discussion and controversy which has now been removed. Where, in a suit instituted in Bombay for breach of a contract to gin cotton in the defendant's mill at Broach, the plaintiff applied for inspection of the defendant's account books in Bombay but the defendant offered to give inspection in Broach, it was held that the latter place was the place where the books were kept and was the proper place for inspection.[1]

1. Scope of the rule.—Sub-Rule 1 of this rule deals with inspection of documents referred to in the pleadings or affidavits of the parties. Sub-R. 2 deals with inspection of documents other than those mentioned in sub-R. 1. The difference between the two cases is that, in the case of documents not mentioned in the pleadings or the affidavits, an affidavit has to be filed by the applicant satisfying the Judge that the document is relevant to the case.[1] In the case of documents so mentioned, the relevancy is admitted while in the other case, the relevancy has to be proved.[1-a] The filing of the affidavit under sub-R. 2 is, however, not always necessary, when the Judge is satisfied as to the relevancy of the document; at any rate, the want of an affidavit cannot invalidate an order passed under this rule.[2] On the other hand, the filing of an affidavit does not entitle a party immediately to an order for inspection.[2-a] The Court should give the opposite party an opportunity of replying by an affidavit, the application for inspection and if the opposite party swears an affidavit that the documents are not in his possession or power, the Court will regard this as final and conclusive.[3] This is in consonance with the general rule that the Courts will not go behind the oath of the party against whom inspection is sought.[4]

An order under sub-R. 1 cannot be made unless notice has been given under the provisions of R. 15[5] and no party is entitled to an inspection of documents not referred to in the pleadings or affidavits without an order under sub-R. 2.[6] Nor is he entitled to a roving commission into papers belonging to the other side; the inspection must be restricted only to such specific documents as the applicant names and which are relevant to his case.[7]

Where parties require the inspection or production of telegraphic messages, it is for them and not the Court to obtain the necessary sanction from Government.[8]

2. Discretion of Court.—Under sub-Rule 1, the Court has a discretion limited to the terms of the proviso, in making an order for inspection and the onus rests on the party resisting an order, to show that it should not be made in the special circumstances of the case; but it would not be a proper exercise of discretion to refuse inspection on the general ground that it was sought before the written statement was filed; nor can the mere number of the documents afford any guide to the exercise of discretion.[1]

3. Convenient place for inspection.—See R. 17 above.

4. Appeal.—No appeal lies under the Code from an order for inspection under this rule; nor does it lie under Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent as an order directing inspection to be given is not a "Judgment".[1]

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.
2. Inspection by the Judge—Sub-R. (2).
3. Specific documents—Sub-R. (3).

O.11, R.19, Notes 1—3.

1. Scope of the rule.—Sub-rule (1) applies particularly to Bankers books.[1]

2. Inspection by the Judge—Sub-R. 2.—This rule gives the Court power to inspect any document for which privilege is claimed so as to decide whether the claim is justified[1] the object being that such claims ought to be decided at once in proper cases.[2] The power exists even in respect of state documents and official communications and notwithstanding a certificate from a Minister of State claiming protection, provided of course that such power be exercised so as not to destroy the protection of the privilege in any case in which it may be found to exist.[3] The word "document" includes also a sealed up portion of a document.[4]

3. Specific documents—Sub-R. 3.—The rule enlarges the power to order discovery.[1] In order to justify an application under this sub-rule, the affidavit must name and specify the document in such a manner as to identify them; an affidavit in a general form containing an argument that the document must be in the possession or power of the opposite party is not sufficient.[2] A prima facie case of relevancy and possession of a specific document is, however, sufficient to entitle the applicant to the order.[3]

O.11, R.20, Note 1.

1. Scope of the rule.—The general principle of discovery is that discovery should not be granted beyond the exigency of the question in issue. It is also desirable to obviate the necessity of a troublesome inspection and discovery which would very much increase the costs of the suit. This rule empowers the Court to determine an issue for the exclusive purpose of deciding the right to discovery of documents which is to be used at the trial.[1] The Court has also a discretion to postpone discovery or inspection until some issue in the suit is determined.[2] The rule, however, does not apply where discovery is wanted for the determination of the issue in the suit.[3] An order under this rule is not a 'judgment' and no appeal lies therefrom.[4]

O.11, R.21, Note 1.

R. 21. [S. 136.] Where any party fails to comply with any order to answer interrogatories, or for discovery or inspection of documents, he shall, if a plaintiff, be liable to have his suit dismissed for want of prosecution, and, if a defendant, to have his defence, if any, struck out, and to be placed in the same position as if he had not defended, and the party interrogating or seeking discovery or inspection may apply to the Court for an order to that effect, and an order may be made accordingly.

Non-compliance with order for discovery.

1. Scope of the rule.—There are only three grounds upon which a trial Court is justified, under this rule, in striking off the defence of the defendant or dismissing the suit of a plaintiff, namely:—

(1) The refusal to answer interrogatories under R. 11;

(2) The refusal to make discovery of documents under R. 12; and

(3) Refusal to permit inspection of documents under R. 18.

In the absence, therefore, of an order under Rr. 11, 12 or 18 and the disobedience thereof by the party against whom the order is made, the Court cannot act under this rule.[1] An order for production of documents under R. 14 is not one of the orders mentioned in this rule, the word "production" which occurred after the word "discovery" in S. 136 of the old Code having been omitted in the present rule. There is, however, a difference of opinion as to whether a disobedience of an order for production under R. 14 would empower the Court to take action under this rule. The High Court of Allahabad[2] and Madras[3] have held that the Court has no such power while an opinion in the nature of obiter dictum has been expressed by the High Court of Lahore in the undermentioned case[4] that the Court has such power. The Court cannot strike out the defendant's defence for his failure to file a written statement as directed by the Court[5] or to appear for examination as a witness for the opposite side.[6] Nor can it be struck off for failure of the legal representative of a deceased defendant to comply with an order against the said defendant.[7]

O.11, R.21, Note 1.

The Court cannot, under this rule, act of its own motion, but can only do so on the application of the parties.[8] And even where the parties apply for an order under this rule the Court should not impose the penalty except in extreme cases and as a last resort.[9] It should be ordered only where the Court is satisfied that party is avoiding a fair discovery[10] or is guilty of wilful default.[11] The word "wilfully" means that the act is done deliberately and intentionally and not by accident or inadvertence.[12] Thus where the time allowed by law to answer interrogatories (ten days) has not expired and the defendant asks for further time, an order striking off the defence is improper.[13] Similarly, the failure to produce one out of many books ordered to be produced,[14] or the non-production of account books by a minor defendant[15] or the failure to produce documents by a purdanashin lady[16] or where the plaintiff is not in a position to make an affidavit of documents as ordered, the Court should not inflict the penalty under this rule.[17]

On an application made for taking action under this rule, the Court should give an opportunity to the other side to put in his reply; an order dismissing the suit or striking off the defence without giving such opportunity is improper.[18]

The terms of the rule contemplate two orders; first an order under Rr. 11, 12, or 18, and secondly, upon the failure to comply therewith, a further order dismissing the suit or the striking off the defence.[19] But a conditional order for dismissal of the suit or for striking off the defence on failure of the orders for interrogatories, discovery, or inspection cannot said to be without jurisdiction.[20] Where the defendant fails to comply with an order for discovery, an order allowing him to defend the suit but shutting out all his evidence is not a proper order; the case should be dealt with under this rule and the defence struck out.[21] The infliction of the penalty imposed by this rule after the whole trial is closed is improper;[22] nor can a Court of appeal punish a party under this rule where the Court of first instance has not taken any action thereunder.[23] Where a suit has been referred to arbitration and the arbitrators call upon a party to produce certain documents, the proper remedy of the party seeking discovery is to apply to the Court to have the proceedings stayed or the suit dismissed or the defence struck out; the arbitrators are not bound, of their own initiative, to refuse to proceed until the order is complied with.[24]

The last paragraph of S. 136 of the old Code which made the defaulting party liable to a prosecution under S. 188 of the Penal Code[25] has now been omitted. A disobedience of an order for production or inspection can now be dealt with only in the manner prescribed by this rule and is not punishable under the Penal Code.[26] O.11, R.21, Notes 1—4.

A Registrar of the High Court has no power under the High Court rules to dismiss a suit under this rule.[27]

2. Committal for contempt.—The Chartered High Courts, have, under powers conferred on them by the Letters Patent, power to commit a party to a suit filed in such High Court who has failed to obey an order for discovery or inspection, for contempt of Court.[1] According to the High Court of Bombay an appeal lies from an order of committal for contempt.[2] According to the High Court of Allahabad no such appeal lies.[3]

3. Appeal.—Under the old Code, an order under this rule was appealable as a decree.[1] Under O. 43, R. 1 (f) of the present Code such an order is appealable only as an order.[2] An order under this rule includes an order dismissing a suit or striking off a defence as well as an order refusing to dismiss the suit or to strike off the defence; in either case it is open to appeal.[3] But where the Court acts without jurisdiction in passing an order under this rule, as where it dismisses a suit for failure to comply with an order to produce documents under R. 14, the order cannot be said to be one passed under this rule; the dismissal in such a case will be a decree and will be appealable as such.[4] Again where an order though purporting to be passed under this rule, is really and in substance under O. 6, R. 5, no appeal lies therefrom.[5]

Where a party appealed from an order under this rule in ignorance of the fact that a decree had been passed in the suit itself. the proper procedure is to treat the appeal as one from the decree itself.[6]

4. Review.—Where a suit is dismissed for want of prosecution under this rule, the remedy of the aggrieved party is by appeal or by review under the provisions of O. 47.[1] Where, however, the provisions of O. 47 do not apply to the particular order in question, the Court cannot review it under its inherent powers under S. 151 of the Code.[2]

ORDER XII.

Admissions.

O. 12, R 1, Note 1.

Notice of admission of case.

R. 1. [New.] Any party to a suit may give notice, by his pleading, or otherwise in writing, that he admits the truth of the whole or any part of the case of any other party.

[R. S. C., O. 32, R. 1.]

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.
2. Kinds of admissions.
3. Admission by minor.
4. Withdrawal of admissions. See R. 2, infra.
5. Costs. See Rr. 2, 4 and 9.

Erroneous admissions. See O. 3, R. 4.

1. Scope of the rule.—Under S. 58 of the Evidence Act, facts admitted need not be proved. The adoption of the procedure provided in this Order would result in saving the costs of such proof and in cheapening and shortening litigation.[1] Further, admissions are the strongest evidence possible and even a wrong construction of a document will be assumed to be correct in view of the admission.[2]

Admissions must be taken as a whole or not at all.[3] If made subject to a condition, they must be accepted with that condition.[4] But where one portion of a claim is admitted and the other portion denied, the plaintiff is entitled to ask for a judgment on the admitted portion and proceed to trial on the other; there is no rule that he should accept both the admission and the denial or must ignore the admission and proceed to trial.[4-a] The value of an admission is however, limited by its relevancy under the Evidence Act, and a judgment based upon irrelevant material will not be upheld.[5] Where the lower Court, in its judgment makes a statement that certain admissions were made, the Appellate Court will not lightly doubt the statement.[6] The question whether there is a cause of action does not depend upon the admission of the defendant, but when the plaint discloses a cause of action, the plaintiff is entitled to get a decree on the admissions of the defence.[7]

S. 97 of the Estates Partition Act (Bengal Act V of 1897) renders provisions of the Code as to compelling production of documents applicable to enquires under the said Act.

2. Kinds of admissions.—The following tabular statement shows the various kinds of admissions after suit, that may be made. As to admissions before suit, see Ss. 17 to 31 of the Evidence Act.

Admissions of facts of documents on notice under O. 12, R. 2. in pleadings
Otherwise than in pleadings.
Expressly
Constructively (O. 8, R. 5).
During the examination by the court under O. 10, R. 1.
in answer to interrogatories under O. 11, R. 8.
on notice under O. 12, R. 4.
On oath under O. 14, R. 3.
On agreement of parties.

3. Admission by minor.—(A minor defendant cannot make a valid admission where a guardian ad litem has been appointed for him in the suit.[1]

4. Withdrawal of admissions.—See R. 2, infra.

5. Costs.—See Rules 2, 4 and 9.

O. 12, R. 2.

R. 2. [S. 128.] Either party may call upon the other party to admit any document, saving all just exceptions; and in case of refusal or neglect to admit, after such notice, the costs of proving any such document shall be paid by the party so neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the suit may be, unless the Court otherwise directs; and no costs of proving any document shall be allowed unless such notice is given, except where the omission to give the notice is, in the opinion of the Court, a saving of expense.

O. 12, R. 2, Notes 1—5.

1. Object of the rule.—The object of the rule is to save the expense of producing, at the trial, evidence as to the documents which are admitted.

2. Form of notice.—See R. 3, below.

3. Notice to admit facts.—See R. 4 below.

4. Admission between co-defendants.—Admissions between co-defendants to which the plaintiff is not a party, cannot be used as evidence against the plaintiff, or be included in an order for taxation of the general costs of the action.[1]

5. Withdrawal of admission.—Leave may be given to withdraw or amend any admissions made by a party, on such terms as to the Court may appear just. Thus an admission made under a mistake may be allowed to be withdrawn and the plaint amended.[1] But, except under special circumstances, an admission forming the foundation of a judgment should not be allowed to be withdrawn in appeal.[2] party to amend or withdraw any admission so made on such terms as may be just.

[R. S. C., O. 32, R. 4.]

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule. 2. "Any other party."

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule provides for notice to admit facts, as the two previous rules provide for notice to admit documents. The penalty for refusing to admit facts pursuant to a notice given under this rule is that the party receiving the notice may be ordered to pay the costs occasioned by proving the facts which ought to have been admitted. A notice to admit facts may be given even before the defence is filed.[1]

2 "Any other party".—"It is obvious only opposite parties can be meant".[1] For the meaning of "opposite party", see Note 11 to O. 11, R. 1.

O. 12, R. 6.

R. 6. [New.] Any party may, at any stage of a suit, where admissions of fact have been made, either on the pleadings, or otherwise, apply to the Court for such judgment or order as upon such admissions he may be entitled to, without waiting for the determination of any other question between the parties: and the Court may upon such application make such order, or give such judgment, as the Court may think just.

1. Re-number the existing Rule 6 as sub-Rule 6 (1) and insert the following as sub-Rules (2) and (3):—

"(2) The Court may also of its own motion make such order or give such judgment as it may consider just, having due regard to the admissions made by the parties.

"(3) Whenever an order or judgment is pronounced under the provisions of this rule a decree may be drawn up in accordance with such order or judgment and bearing the same date as the day on which the order or judgment was pronounced."

PATNA.

O. 12, R. 6, Note 1.

Substitute the following for Rule 6 in Order 12:—

6. Where admission of fact have been made, either on the pleadings or otherwise, the Court may, at any stage of a suit, on the application of any party, or, of its own motion, without waiting for the determination of any other question between the parties, make such order or give such judgment, as it may think just.

RANGOON.

In Order 12, Rule 6 substitute "judgment, decree or order" for the word "judgment or order" and "and the Court may, either upon such application or upon its own motion, give such judgment or make such decree or order as the Court may think just" for "and the Court may . . . . just".

Add the following as sub-Rule (2):—

"(2) A decree or order passed under this rule may be executed at any time, notwithstanding that other questions between the parties still remain to be decided in the case."

Minor defendant. See R. 1, Note 3. Withdrawal of admission. See R. 2, Note 5.

1. Scope of the rule.—A party can, under this rule, move for a judgment upon the admissions made by the opposite party and thus get rid of the portion of the action in which there is no dispute.[1] The object is to enable a party to obtain speedy judgment, at least to the extent of the relief, which, according to the admissions of the opposite party, he is entitled to.[2] But he is not bound to avail himself of this rule and is not precluded by not so applying from relying on such admissions at the trial.[3] Nor on the other hand, is the Court bound, in every case, to pass a judgment on the application of a party under this rule; the matter is entirely in the discretion of the Court. See Note 6 below.

In moving for a judgment under this rule, the party applying need not relinquish the rest of his claim.[4] But the admission on which a judgment can be claimed must be a clear and unequivocal one.[5] Further, an admission of a defendant will not necessarily entitle the plaintiff to a judgment, where the right asserted by the plaintiff has, in fact, no existence in law,[6] or where he has no cause of action at all.[7]

The rule refers only to admissions on points of fact and not on points of law.[8]

2. "At any stage".—A plaintiff may move for judgment upon admissions on the defence, although he has joined issue on the defence.[1] Similarly, a defendant may apply to have the suit dismissed after he has delivered a rejoinder.[2]

3. Admissions on pleadings.—As has been seen in Note 2 to R. 1, an admission of facts in a pleading may be made either expressly or constructively. Under O. 8, R. 5, every allegation of fact in the plaint, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or, stated to be not admitted in the pleading of the defendant, shall be taken to be admitted. This is a constructive admission in a pleading. A defendant denying a plaint allegation evasively will be deemed not to have denied at all, and will, therefore, be deemed to have admitted such allegation (see O. 8, R. 4). Thus in Harris v. Gamble[1] the defendant in his defence merely, "put the plaintiffs to proof of their several allegations in their statement of claim". Defendant failed to appear at the trial, and judgment was given for the plaintiff without calling evidence, on the ground that such a defence was an admission of facts alleged in the statement of claim.

4. Court may make such order as it may think just.—The provisions of this rule are discretionary and not mandatory; it is not, therefore, incumbent on the Courts in all cases, to pass a judgment upon admission.[1] If a case involves questions which cannot conveniently be disposed of on an application under this rule, or if the case is such that it is not safe to pass a judgment on admissions the Court may, in the exercise of its discretion, refuse the motion.[2] Thus in divorce cases a Court will not ordinarily pass a decree for dissolution of marriage on the mere admissions of the parties in view of possible collusion between the parties.[2-a] Where, however, the defendant admits the claim, but the plaintiff is absent at the trial, the suit should not be dismissed; a decree should be passed on the strength of the defendant's admission.[8] Where an application is made under this rule on the basis of a constructive admission, the Court may refuse to pass a decree if, in the circumstances of the case, it is of opinion that the defendant must not be held to have admitted facts not specifically denied in the Written Statement.[4]

5. Orders that may be passed under this rule.—As a general rule a judgment on admissions can be passed in all cases in which under the Code, a preliminary decree can be passed. See O. 20, Rr. 13, 15, 16 and 18.

6. Admissions made otherwise than on pleadings.—The use of the words "or otherwise" without the words "in writing" which are used in R. 1 shows that a judgment may be given even upon verbal admission,[1] though caution is required in acting upon such admissions.[2] The rule is wide enough to afford relief not only in cases of admissions made in the pleadings, but also in the case of admissions de hors the pleadings.[3] Thus admissions contained in letters written before action brought[4] or in a letter written after action[5] are sufficient for the purposes of this rule.

7. English practice.—See Daniel's Chancery, Forms 270 and Seton on Decrees, Vol. I, page 399, Form No. 5. Also Chitty's Forms, 15th Edition, p. 310.

8. Co-plaintiffs.—An application under this rule for an order against a defendant should, where there are several plaintiffs, be made by all of them.[1]

9. Judgment if should be followed by a decree.—According to the Calcutta High Court, there is nothing objectionable to a decree being drawn up on a judgment under this rule and later on to another decree being drawn up after investigation of the claim not admitted.[1] But according to the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court, it is not necessary to have a decree drawn up on a judgment passed under this rule, it being open to the plaintiff to enforce payment of the amount awarded as an order in execution proceedings by virtue of S. 36.[2]

10. Appeal.—An order rejecting an application for a judgment on admissions is a "judgment" within Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and is appealable under the Letters Patent.[1]

PRODUCTION, IMPOUNDING AND RETURN OF DOCUMENTS.

O. 13, R. 1. R. 1. [Ss. 138, 140.] (1) The parties or their pleaders shall produce, at the first hearing of the suit, all the documentary evidence of every description in their possession or power, on which they intend to rely, and which has not already been filed in Court, and all documents which the Court has ordered to be produced.

Documentary evidence to be produced at first hearing.

(2) The Court shall receive the documents so produced: provided that they are accompanied by an accurate list thereof prepared in such form as the High Court directs.

[1877—Ss. 138, 140; 1859—Ss. 128, 129.]

PATNA.

In Rule 1, after the words "at the first hearing of the suit" should be added the words:—

"Or, where issues are framed, on the day when issues are framed, or within such further time as the Court may permit." O. 13, R. 1. Note 1.

RANGOON.

To Rule 1, the following shall be added as sub-Rule (3):—

"(3). The High Court of Judicature at Rangoon directs that such lists shall be prepared in form Judicial ——— which will be given free of charge to parties wishing to tender documents in evidence." General 23.

OUDH.

For Rule 1, substitute the following:—

"1. (1) The parties or their pleaders shall produce or cause to be produced, on the date fixed by the Court, under Order 7, Rule 14 and Order 8, Rule 1 (2), or on any subsequent date which may be fixed by the Court for the purpose, all the documentary evidence of every description in their possession or power on which they intend to rely, and which has not already been filed in Court, and all documents which the Court has permitted or ordered to be produced.

(2) The parties or their pleaders may also file, with the permission of the Court, either on the date of hearing or any subsequent date to be fixed by the Court for the purpose, a supplementary list of further documents on which they intend to rely, and such documents shall be produced by them within the time fixed by the Court.

(3) The Court shall receive the documents so produced, provided that (whenever the documents are produced at any stage of the case) they are accompanied by an accurate list thereof prepared in such form as the Chief Court may direct.

N.-W. F. P.

The following rule is substituted:—

"All documentary evidence shall be produced by the parties or their pleaders in the method and at the time prescribed in Orders 7 and 8; provided that after the settlement of issues, the Court may fix a date, not being more than 30 days after such settlement, within which the parties may present supplementary lists of documents on which they rely."

1. Scope and object of the rule.—A Court must secure a fair trial of cases, and to that end obviate the chances for the parties to adduce forged or manufactured evidence. This rule, accordingly, enjoins on the parties to lay their documents before the Court at the earliest possible opportunity.[1] Where the documents are not in the possession or power of the party, they cannot and therefore need not be produced at the first hearing.[2]

The rule is peremptory that the documents on which a party intends to rely must be produced at the first hearing.[3] But as the object of the rule is not to penalise the parties, the Court is given discretion under R. 2, to receive any documents at later stages of the suit if there is no suspicion about their genuineness.[4]

The provisions of this order relating to the production of documents are made applicable to proceedings under the undermentioned Acts.[5]

2. "Shall produce at the first hearing."—The procedure under the Code relating to the production of documents by the parties is briefly as follows:—

The plaintiff shall produce and deliver into Court with the plaint the document on which he sues, if it is in his possession or power (O. 7, R. 14, Sub-R. 1). Other documents, whether in his possession or power or not, on which he relies in support of his claim need not, however, be produced with the plaint, but a list thereof shall be filed at the time of the plaint (O. 7, R. 14, Sub-R. 2). In that list the plaintiff need mention only those documents on which he relies for his claim. He need not anticipate the defence case and mention in the list such documents as may form an answer to such a defence. Nor need he mention in the list of documents to be produced for the cross-examination of the defendant's witnesses or for refreshing the memory of a witness (O. 7, R. 18, Sub-R. 2).

Where the documents referred to in O. 7, R. 14 is not in his possession or power, the plaintiff shall, if possible state in whose possession or power it is. (O. 7, R. 15). After the suit is instituted, a summons with a copy of the plaint is served on the defendant to appear and answer the plaintiff's claim (O. 5, R. 1). The summons will also order the defendant to produce all documents in his possession or power on which he intends to rely in support of his case (O. 5, R. 7). On the day on which the defendant is to appear and answer according to the summons both parties must be present and the Court may hear the parties (O. 9, R. 1). On that day, both the parties shall, under this rule, bring in all the documents on which they rely, and the Court is bound to receive them, if they duly put them in (Sub-R. 2).[1]

The language of this rule may be contrasted with the language used in O. 7, R. 14 with reference to the production of the document on which the plaintiff sues, viz., "he shall produce it in Court and shall at the same time deliver the document . . . . to be filed with the plaint." Production as such of documents under this rule amounts only to bringing in the documents with the object of leaving them in Court. The non-production of the documents by a party as per the terms of this rule is done at his own peril, the consequence of such non-production being that the Court will not receive them at a later stage except on satisfactory grounds. Accordingly, the plaintiff, if he desires to avoid the risk of his documents being rejected subsequently and to ensure their being received by the Court, must produce, under this rule at the first hearing all the documents mentioned in his list filed under O. 7, R. 14 and also such documents as may be ordered by the Court to be produced under O. 11, R. 14. But documents of the kind specified in O. 7, R. 18, Sub-R. 2 or documents which are not in the possession or power of the plaintiff do not come under this rule.[2] The defendant is bound by the same procedure so far as it may be applicable to him. O. 13, R. 1, Notes 2—5.

Is the Court bound to pass an order fixing a date for the production of documents? Under the corresponding section of the Code of 1882, the parties were required only to keep their documents in readiness at the first hearing to be produced when called for by the Court.[3] The present rule requires the parties not only to get ready but also to produce (i.e.,) to deposit in Court their documents at the first hearing. The terms of the present rule are clear, and an order fixing a date for production of documents by the parties is not a condition precedent for their production. But the rule does not preclude a Court from calling on the parties, for valid reasons, to produce their documents or a list thereof by a specified date.[4] Thus where the Court does not want the production of documents till a particular stage in the suit is reached it may pass an order requiring parties to produce their documents within a specified time.[5] The view, however, that the Court is bound to receive documents at any stage of the suit if there is no order of the Court for production within a fixed time[6] does not appear to be sound or consistent with the terms of this rule.

Synopsis.

1. Effect of non-production of documents.
2. "Unless good cause is shown."
3. Appeal.

Discretion of Court to excuse late production. See Note 1.

1. Effect of non-production of documents.—The object of the previous rule is to prevent fraud by the late production of suspicious documents. See Note 1 to R. 1. When, therefore, the genuineness of a document is beyond doubt there can be no reasonable objection to its reception even at a later stage.[1] The rule makes the satisfactory explanation for non-production at the first hearing a condition precedent for the reception of documents produced out of time. But the rule must be liberally construed so as to advance the cause of justice.[2] No documents, whether public[3] or private[4] which are above suspicion should be excluded if they are necessary for the proper decision of the case.

The Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, while disagreeing with the view which gives a liberal construction to this rule, has, however, arrived at the same result by granting the application under its inherent powers under S. 151 of the Code.[5]

Once a document is received under this rule, no adverse inference can be drawn against the party on the ground of late production.[6]

The discretion to reject a document under this rule must be exercised at the earliest possible opportunity after production, for, documents not promptly rejected,[7] or ordered merely to be kept on the file[8] will be deemed to have been received. O. 13, R. 2, Notes 1—3.

2. "Unless good cause is shown."—Vexatious and dilatory applications for the reception of documents cannot be granted.[1] It is not a good case for non-production that on the day fixed for the production of documents the hearing only resulted in an adjournment.[2] The Court must record its reasons for receiving document beyond time.[3] Admission of papers after long delay without recording any reasons is wrong.[3]

3. Appeal.—The admission or rejection of documents under this rule is entirely in the discretion, of the trial Court[1] and an appellate Court will not interfere with it,[2] unless such discretion has been exercised capriciously or improperly.[3] In a case where the trial Court, in its discretion received documents produced at a late stage, the Privy Council said "If the sanction of the Court can purge the original defect, it has been so purged", and held that the late production cannot be a ground of appeal from the decision in the suit.[4] hearing, however, numerous they might be. Under R. 2, again, the Court, at its discretion, receives documents subsequently produced, or rejects them for late production. Out of the documents received as aforesaid, the Court, under the rule, is expected and empowered to exercise discrimination and reject even in limine, documents considered irrelevant or otherwise inadmissible,[1] and retain on the file only such of the documents as may, if properly proved, be used as evidence at the trial.[2] Rejection under this rule may be at any stage.[3] For the procedure on rejection, see R. 6 below.

2. Objection to admissibility.—There is a distinction in this matter between a point of relevancy, and a point of admissibility. Whether an objection is raised or not, every Court is bound to reject irrelevant documents.[1] But objections to the admissibility of documents for want of proof or any necessary formality must be taken at the trial[2] and should be decided as they arise and not reserved until judgment is given.[3] In case of doubt on a question of admissibility, the safer course for the Court, in appealable cases, is to admit the document.[4]

No objection will be allowed to be taken in appeal to the admissibility of a document which was admitted in evidence without objection at the trial.[5] The reason is, that if the objection had been taken at the trial, the party tendering the document would have taken steps to duly prove it.[6] As to objections on the score of insufficient stamp duty, see Ss. 35 and 36 of the Stamp Act (II of 1899), and the following cases.[7]

3. Appeal.—There is no appeal for an order rejecting a document under this rule; though the order may be challenged in an appeal from the decree in the suit.[1]

Local Amendments.

OUDH.

In Rule 4 (1) (d), add "in the Judge's own handwriting" after the word "statement".

RANGOON.

To Order 13, Rule 4, the following shall be added as sub-Rules (3), (4) and (5):—

(3) The Court shall mark the documents which are admitted on behalf of the plaintiff or plaintiffs with capital letters in the order in which they are admitted, thus, A, B, C, etc., and the documents admitted on behalf of the defendant with figures 1, 2, 3, etc.

(4) When a number of documents of the same nature are admitted, as, for example, a series of receipts for rent, the whole series shall bear one number or capital letter, a small number or small letter being added to distinguish each paper of the series.

Judicial General 25

(5) Every document on admission shall be entered in a list in Form——— prepared by the Bench Clerk and signed by the Judge.

Synopsis.

1. Legislative changes.
2. Endorsements on admitted documentary evidence.

Rule to be strictly followed. See Note 2, Pt. (4-a).

1. Legislative changes.—

The words "or initialled" in this rule are new.

O. 13, R 4, Note 2.

2. Endorsements on admitted documentary evidence.—There are two stages relating to documents filed in Court:—One is the stage when all the documents are filed by the parties in Court; the next stage is where the documents are formally proved and tendered in evidence. It is at this stage that the Court has to decide whether they are to be admitted or rejected.[1] If the documents are admitted and proved, then the endorsement containing the particulars referred to in the rule is to be made on them. The endorsement is intended to be a record of the fact that the document has been admitted in evidence after the necessary legal formalties have been complied with.[2] An endorsement, therefor, made before the documents are proved[3] or the practice of putting a seal on the documents immediately on their production[4] is not proper.

The rule as to the endorsement of the documents must be strictly followed[4-a] as otherwise the documents will not be legally before the Court and superior Courts may refuse to allow them to be used in evidence.[5] The marking of documents for mere identification[6] or a mechanical endorsement without the Judge applying his mind to a consideration as to the admissibility of the document[7] does not amount to an admission in evidence.

Documents shown to have been regularly admitted in evidence by a commissioner cannot be objected to on the ground of the want of endosement by the Court under this rule.[8]
